WOMAN AND HOME.

Mother.

When the Japanese visitors were in Philadelphia at the time of the Centennial exhibition on American architecture, noticing the awe of a high officer of the Japanese empire, asked him, "What do you think of your mother?"

"You are the first person in America who has asked that question," said the Japanese as his eyes filled with tears and his voice trembled his emotion; "why do you ask it?"

"Because," said the other, "the reply to such a question throws a strong light on the domestic life and family ties of a people, as well as on the personal character of its individual citizens, and on the morals and customs and government of the nation."

"Well," said the Japanese, "I will tell you. Some I left home my mother has, every week, regularly written me a long letter, telling about everything in the family and at home, and every week, in the same way, I have written to her, telling her of all my movements, and of what I am and hope and do.

"If it were not for those letters I should long ago have been out of my mind, or have gone back to see her and be with her. She is always on my heart." And his earnest and tender tones confirmed and impressed what he said.

When he was further asked if such was the general feeling of children to their parents among his countrymen and in the empire, he replied, that so far as his observation extended, among the better classes, it was.

"What do you think of your mother?" is a question that shows what is the character and influence of the mother herself; what she has been and training she has given to her children; what the respect and honor of children to their parents; what the position of women in the family and in society; and what the preparation of a rising generation to be good men and women, good citizens and supporters of all that is good in the society, government and institutions of a country.—Youth's Companion.

An Entertaining Parlor Game.

Amateur poets may find a good deal of amusement in several parlor games. Crambo is an old friend of those who rhyme and sometimes of those who cannot. There is a new game, or at least an adaptation of an old one, is a rhyming game which the inventor saw a number of young people playing about a library table. They all began together, wrote a line apiece, exchanged papers, each wrote a second line and exchanged again; the third line went rhyme with the first, the fourth with the second. When the first grist of stanzas was finished, free exchanges of papers having been effected in the course of their writing, the results were read. The absurdity of the stanzas was not intolerable, it depended chiefly on the rhymes, really being achieved and with sometimes in them their wise was in the moment of their production, and in the merriment of their reading, but it was piquant, and tickled the palates of the four young people.

The four young people laughed a good deal. When four hands each have a finger in the pie there is proof in the eating of it. Three of the contributed nonsense stanzas are given, as a pattern for other rhymesters in search of employment of this sort, not for their merit. Not one of the four who wrote them thus would admit acknowledging that they have only relative merit:

Miss Jenkins had a bonnet,
"Twas made of bright pink chip;
She had a cardinal on it,
And a beetle that could skip!

The goldfish and the gold cow
Went walking down the city,
And fell her plump in an iron tub,
Then hung on a line to dry.

John and Thomas loved each other
With a child-like loving love,
But they thrashed their mother
With a double lasting glove!

—Boston Transcript.

"The Charmed Circle."

One of the most simple yet puzzling tricks which may be illustrated by the figure on the face of a watch is called "The Charmed Circle." It is sometimes known as "The Wind Blown Leaves." All the paraphernalia required is a sheet of paper and a pencil. On the paper make a circle of the figures.

The trick is to tell any number in the circle thought of by another person. This is how it is done: After a number has been selected by your friend, ask him to ask one to it when you strike the paper. Then you continue the striking and he thereupon until twenty is reached. Then you will be on the number he has chosen.

Care must be taken, however, in filling the figures to be sure that on the eighth stroke you touch twelve, and then move around the circle to the left, touching each number in regular order. It is an unfailing source of mystifying amusement.

It can be made more confusing by distributing the five seven strokes around the circle promiscuously, but do not fail to touch twelve on the eighth and proceed as directed.—New York Herald.

The Extravagance of Roman Women.

We read of Sarah Bernhardt bringing with her on her visit to this country forty-five trunks containing no fewer than a hundred gowns. That seems to us a wonderful extravagance, but we may be mistaken. Yet it would have served only a female and shabby author to the author of Roman fashion of the first century of our era. We are told on trustworthy authority that the dresses worn of Lollia Paulina, the wife of Caligula, were valued at $1,000,000.

Pliny relates that he saw her at a plain citizen's bridal supper literally covered with pearls and emeralds worth $1,000,000 sesterces, equivalent in our money to $1,000,000. Another lavish beauty of more or less same epoch, Lollia Salina, never traveled without a train of 500 slave women, so that she might not miss her morning's bath of asses' milk. By the side of their Roman prototypes the most extravagant women of our own day seem thrifty.—New York Ledger.

Toothsome Ways of Serving Bananas.

A compote of red bananas served with whipped cream is a nice luncheon dish. Make a syrup with a large cup of sugar and a small pint of water. Let the syrup come to the boiling point and boil rapidly for ten minutes and then add a gill of maraschino. Pour the hot syrup over as many red bananas, cut in thin slices, as it will cover. When the syrup is cold, serve the bananas with whipped cream. Many fresh fruits are much more delicious served with a spoonful of syrup like this than with raw sugar. Oranges are especially nice cut up and served in this way. Only the maraschino, however, for oranges, but flavor the syrup if you like with a little grated orange peel.—New York Tribune.

Among the pretty pillows made nowadays is the "Roman" pillow, to be used in railway traveling. About a foot square, it is stuffed with Roman celandanas and covered with pongee. Chinese silk. There should also be a slip cover of linen that may be laundered.

Camphor in Florida.

Prof. Maisch, in a paper read before the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, stated that the camphor tree thrives in Florida and seems to do as well as any kind of soil and seems to do as well as any kind of soil and has been long live round Cane will be more camphor than orange trees in that state. The quality of the gum is more like Japanese than Chinese camphor.—English Mechanic.
