IN LEGAL QUARTERS.

Cases in the Judges and U. S. Commissioners' Courts.

Before Judge Zane yesterday afternoon, the case of H. M. Abbott vs. William R. Andrews, in which the sum of $2000 is in dispute, came on for trial. The action arises out of the sale of a blooded stallion, and all sorts of double dealing appear to be mixed up in the transaction. In his opening statement to the jury, Mr. Harlan pulled the defendant's answer to pieces. Then the defendant's attorneys (Richards & Shepley) asked leave to amend their demur. Thompson for the other side made a like request and so that all the most adjourned until today with the understanding that the case will be called in the afternoon, if possible; otherwise it will go to the foot of the docket.

On motion of Attorney J. A. Williams and upon the representation that the differences between plaintiff and defendant had been amicably adjusted, the case of John Forrester vs. Salt Lake Cement and Rock Co., was dismissed.

An order was made dismissing the case of Nellie Forrester vs. Salt Cement and Limestone Plaster Co.

BEFORE JUDGE ANDERSON.

In Judge Anderson's court, in the case of the Utah Stove and Hardware Company vs. Ellsworth Axe Jewelry company, a verdict was returned for the plaintiff in the sum of $[illegible]. This action was the outcome of the purchase of a safe from the Ellsworth company by the Utah Stove and Hardware Co. The safe was shipped from Chicago, but was found to be defective and the goods were appealed to in order to get a satisfactory settlement.

The demurrer to the complaint heretofore submitted in the case of Charles Crouse and others vs. W. H. Wallace was sustained and ten days were given plaintiffs to amend.

The damage case of Sarah Sloan against Harvey Stats and others wherein the greater portion of the afternoon. Many witnesses were examined and the jury received instructions to bring in a sealed verdict. The plaintiff sued to recover damages done to leased furniture and for one month's rent, to the extent of $[illegible].

The hearing on motion to dismiss the proceedings relief in the case of Hyrum Greenwalt vs. Blue Jay Consolidated mining company was set for Saturday, April 23.

JUDGE ZANE.

The case of J. H. Hall, charged with embezzling a considerable sum of money while acting as collector for Dewhurst, Larsen & Mathews jewelry company, was yesterday adjourned, on request of defendant, transferred from Commissioner Greenwalt's court to that of Commissioner Pratt. The adjournment was made for Tuesday next.

The attorneys are preparing the transcript of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the Supreme Court of Utah in the case of John A. Taylor et al. vs. M. H. Hooper and others, involving the question of appeal to United States Supreme Court.

Daniel Hooper for enforcement suit in the Third District court against Elias A. Smith, administrator of the estate of Elias Smith, deceased, and sixteen others, to have them brought into court to demonstrate the extent of their claims to certain property in Salt Lake county, in order that the court may adjudicate all adverse claims.

J. P. Hutchinson, who was arrested a day or two ago on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, from De Witt H. Lowe and N. L. Comings, was taken before United States Commissioner J. W. Green Saturday afternoon for hearing. The complainant, after hearing a statement of the case, discharged the prisoner on the ground that the transaction whereby Hutchinson had secured the $[illegible] was simply a breach of trust. He thus gave it a legal technicality. A warrant was secured for the arrest of one J. A. Pearce, as an accomplice of Hutchinson, but he is keeping out of the way.

The case of Joseph Nielsen, vs. George A. Allen, is being tried in the Land Office. The case involves homestead entry No. 8041, covering the northwest quarter of section 25, township 13 south, range 1 west.

OLD ADVERTISING.

SCHEMES WHICH WERE QUAINT, BUT NOT ALTOGETHER SECURITY.

(Chicago Press.)

Among the many schemes adopted in advertising some one several years ago conceived the idea of using an imitation of telegraph blanks, with envelopes to match. The firm which took the matter up prepared to work it to the limit. They got the regulation yellow paper and used type which could not be told from that on the genuine blanks. They printed the rules in small type, and it is very easy make the blank look like a genuine one, except that the headline read "Union Telegraph Company."

The advertisement itself was also a part of the fake, for it was written for all the world as we see them every day coming from the telegraph office. But after all, good as the scheme looked, it did not pan out well. Not too what it might have done so and brought the advertiser good returns, but for a certain reason it was very early in the game nipped in the bud.

This was how it happened: A lot of them blanks were filled out, specifying a certain line of goods. A boy was hired, and he, too, was fixed up in proper shape to hand on the regulation envelope of the regular messenger. Night and early one morning the lad started out on his mission.

He would ring the door bells and people would come and receive the message in astonishment, while the lad would skip away before they could recover. Opening it, of course, explained everything. At one place, however, the messenger had an experience he did not like. He rang the door bell and in a moment or two a lady appeared and opened it. The lady read the new the messenger boy skurried out "Mary's dead!" and with one long, wild, piercing, frenzied shriek she fell upon the floor in a dead faint.

The lad, almost as frightened as she, threw down the envelope in the hall, turned and ran back to the office. Reaching there, he pulled off his coat and hat and changed his old clothes. He told his employers the circumstance and they decided he was enough. "I ain't going around killing no more people," he said, and he went home. Looking into the matter, the firm learned that the woman had been twitted exceeding bad news concerning a sick sister, and seeing the boy she thought the worst had come. The firm concluded that such results would not pay, and they at once discontinued their idea of advertising.

Recollections of Agassiz.

"He had been a student all his life long, and which he did it was younger than any of them." So wrote Theodore Lyman, one of the great naturalists and students, about Agassiz, when he and President David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford University, was also one of Agassiz's students. He continues in The Popular Science Monthly an admirable sketch of the man who gave biology its impetus in America.

President Jordan wrote especially about Agassiz's exposure added at Penikese, the pioneer of summer schools in America. Penikese is a desolate island off Buzzards bay, opposite Gosnold, on the coast of New Bedford, off the Massachusetts coast. In the month of June, 1873, Agassiz began his second term, the attendance being given to an old hotel. Ernest Ingersoll and Edward S. Morse were among the people that summer at Penikese. Perhaps from Agassiz Mr. Morse learned his diversity with clerks and blacksmiths, for the master was seldom without a piece of shell in his hand. Above all things, Agassiz enjoyed the use of tools in natural sciences. Nature, and nature only, should be the subject he studied. For the zoology committed to memory from the printed page he had no respect.

He hoisted on the school at Penikese as a museum work of the greatest importance. He was an enthusiast alike for long, picturesque to all he said and did. He opposed, Darwinism with energy, perhaps on account of the second appearance of his character. His arguments appeared in magazines. Amongst the quotations by Mr. Jordan are the following:

"You cannot do without one specialty. Time will have supposed but have followed for years some idea thread which has come in public treasures and and disclosed some treasure worth a fortune, maybe. Well, spend all to secure." "I had been agent at three expeditions in succession than in a scientific laboratory."

Perhaps the best evidence of Agassiz's success as a teacher lies in the fact that every one of the men specially trained by him went into the ranks of Darwin and his associations. He taught his pupils to think for themselves, and he think so he did." says Mr. Jordan. Compared the thought and the questions for themselves and become authorities.

At Penikese that one summer he taught students how to instruct their pupils. How they should each collect history, honor or any knowledge he illustrated by this anecdote.

"I met Agassiz at Gloucester. Morse, Ingersoll and I had been collecting in Gloucester harbor. We had a bucket of specimens and we showed them to Agassiz. He turned over the specimens with his cane and then said to Morse, 'Do you know what a fish is?' Morse was nonplussed and confused. Then he said to Ingersoll, 'Do you know what a fish is?' Ingersoll was nonplussed and confused. Then he said to me, 'Do you know what a fish is?' I was nonplussed and confused. Then he said to us all, 'Gentlemen, a fish is a fish.'"

Agassiz died in December, 1873. In the summer of 1874 there was an attempt made to endorse the school, but the master spirit was gone. The fire was gone out now, Penikese and its fate and of the summer the enthusiasm of the students about the idea of the Anderson school forever." The buildings remain exactly the same as the day, however.

The Gloucester in the Boston Herald of Sunday, April 3, 1892, contains the following:

"A laboratory is necessary when science perfect itself more.

"Professor Agassiz, the head of Penikese is deserved, the largest school since Dr. Agassiz's work. Some this spring and to be in every sense of Anderson school."

With an appreciation of the rich treasures which it has given to our town from Brazil, Professor Agassiz's work in Gloucester harbor, the Gloucester Society of Natural History would like to see Professor Agassiz's work in Gloucester harbor, and to see the work of the Anderson school in the office and market. The school at Penikese ended in the general prospect of Agassiz. What he saw it was enough."

A man who drinks to be a leader should never throw blame on his subordinates when they get wrong with liquor. This is what Emperor William did, blaming his ministers when his favorite education bill could not be rammed down German throats. He said the ministers misled him as to the public mind. Thereby he proved that he was not only a small man, but a mean one as well. The ministers could not longer remain with him with any self respect. The beginning of wisdom is to know one's self and, and if William can learn this lesson there is still hope for him and his empire.

The judiciary committee of the national house will shortly give a hearing to the advocates of a sixteenth amendment to the United States constitution, prohibiting any state from passing any law respecting the establishment of religion, or to use its property or credit and money raised by taxation for the purpose of aiding any church, religious denomination, religious society or any institution wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

Speaking of the Dorjon-Bernier scandal, The Duchess of Marlborough, who was a passenger on the Majestic, remarked: "It is much to be hoped that such should never be printed. This sort of thing doesn't get into English papers at all." The reason indeed.

A bill has been introduced into the United States senate for a commission to recommend a site for a national sanitarium for pulmonary diseases. What do we want with a national sanitarium for pulmonary diseases?

One spring herself "A Married Woman" remarks that if the society ladies had to do all their own housework and take care of their family besides, they would not have time to think of all sorts of things. Still, there are not wanting on the second score where the "married Wife," where she holds up as models those good women. Even because when break and overcharge.

"In the letter case I have Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and I think with considerable success, only being in bed a little over two days, against ten days by the first attack. The second attack I am satisfied would have been equally as bad as the first but for the use of this remedy, as I had to go to bed in about six hours after being attacked with it, while in the first case I was able to attend to business about two days before getting "down," so recommend it highly." Four doctors gave me up, saying I could not live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Savior, determined if I could not stay with my friends in earth, I would meet my friends above. My husband was advised to get Dr. Kings New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all, eight bottles; it has cured me, and I think that I am now a well and healthy woman." Trial bottles free at A. C. Smith & Co's Drug store, regular size 50c. and $1.00.
