Absent—Smith, Folland, Pickard and Spafford.

Granted.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 28th, 1891.

Salt Lake City,

IT WAS A DRAW.

Last Night's Contest at the Tug of War Tournament was an Exciting One.

The contest at the tug of war tournament in Walker's Pavilion last night was the longest and most exciting struggle since the opening.

The contending teams were the Italians and Danes. The struggle commenced at 8:30 and lasted for five hours and ten minutes. It was one of the hardest fought battles on record. The enthusiasm at times was intense. The friends of each cheered themselves hoarse. Both teams pulled until they were completely exhausted. At one time the Italians had three feet of rope in their credit but it was taken away from them by the muscular and gritty Danes, who were unable to win themselves but determined that the contest should not be decided in favor of their opponents. When morning came half the sections had dropped, and when the lights had gone out at nearly 2 o'clock this morning, the struggle resulted in a draw. The hardy Danes have challenged the Italians to decide the struggle tonight in a thirty minutes' contest.

Tonight the Swedes and the Americans will measure strength. It will doubtless be one of the great contests of the tournament.

The Scotch will pull against the Scots, and will in all probability be defeated. The English and Irish teams are also entered for tonight.

A SALOON ROW.

Alleged Disgraceful Assault Upon a Man on Christmas Day.

A complaint has been sworn out in Commissioner Pratt's court by a man named Otto Noel, who alleges that on the evening of Christmas Day he was at Charles Toledo's saloon on the State Road, when he was assaulted by the proprietor of that establishment and three other men, Olaf Erickson, Eric Erickson and Charles Trapp. Warrants were issued on the strength of his statement, and shortly before noon all the defendants with one exception (Eric Erickson) went before Commissioner Pratt on a charge of assault and battery. Noel was badly beaten about his head, which is still enveloped in a surgical bandage. He declares that the assault was committed with a blunt instrument, and that he gave his assailants no provocation. The three defendants who appeared today were placed under a bond of $200 each, to again come before the court next Monday. A search will be made in the meantime for the missing man.

FRAMES FOR PICTURES.

Oil paintings should be framed in gold, silver or bronze. A frame of white and gold is best for a water color, while engravings and etchings look best in frames of natural wood, either polished or varnished, but never gilded. Photographs can be framed in natural wood or molded flat gold or bronzed frames, according to the subject and the taste of the patron. Soft gray or cream tinted mats are the best for pictures in general, throwing the picture back from the glass and softening the effect, but tinted mats may occasionally be used. A dark blue mat, when used with a picture in tone, in a blue colored or nearly a colored or gilded one, may be very effective, but should only be used exceptionally.

The frame for an oil painting should be as flat as can be, but always bevelled at the outer edge, to throw the picture back and increase the perspective in which it is most seen, and harmonize it with the walls. Sometimes an oil is of modest character and has not much depth of [illegible] frames in dark crimson or dull blue colors, the pile of the velvet softening the picture yet imparting a bold and rich effect, while the glitter of a golden frame almost wholly absorbs its light.

Water colors are often harmoniously framed in mats which carry out the delicate prevailing color in themselves, especially in harbor scenes and marines. The mat can often be the palest tint of cream, pink, buff, atmospheric gray or sea green, while the frame itself may repeat the hint, with delicate lines of gold, or for those of simple white and gilt molding.—Harper's Bazar.

THE VALUE OF MEDICINE.

A noted Paris physician tells the following story, and adds himself: "At times," he said, "there comes to most people a doubting of all that has heretofore seemed the truest. Doctors, as well as others, are subject to those periods of depression in which they question the efficacy of their own judgment. In such a mood, while I was superintendent of Hospital de ——, I divided the result of the week. In one I administered to patients all that the art of drugs could afford; in the other I only gave as medicine a little aerid water. This experiment I continued for a month with equally good nursing in both wards."

"Well, with what result?" said his listener.

"The cases in both wards averaged just the same," answered the doctor.

"And what do you join faith from that?" said his companion.

"I hardly know," continued the physician. "I was only thankful that the experiment did not actually wage against my profession more than it did; but on the principle of doing one's best, I have gone back to my medicines—if not with absolute confidence, at least with the consciousness that we can at least alleviate suffering, and, all things being favorable, may effect a cure.—New York Tribune.

WHY FAKIRS THRIVE.

The man who lays shoestrings and other small articles from street fakirs doesn't always do so because he gets them, or thinks he gets them, cheaper. It is simply because men engaged in business are usually so absorbed in their trifles of every-day use are never thought of unless they are pushed right under the business nose. As a rule the staid people of street vendors come two to five times as much as it would in a legitimate store. But it is on this single weakness of mankind that the street fakir lives and thrives. A man will feel in his pocket and discover a dozen worthless before he will remember to get a new pair. Then suddenly during a rainy day he runs against a shouting peddler and buys a pair on the spot, paying double price for what his dealer would give him for nothing.

The fakirs thrive best in the closest and most busy centers. Down in Wall and Broad and New and Nassau streets, among the bankers and brokers and lawyers, who are too busy to think of the peddlers and shoestrings and lead pencils, etc., the street fakirs fare well, for amid the roar of clashing million the overworked man stumbles hastily on what he sees opportune, knowing that other wise he will forget all about it.—New York Herald.

A Preventive for Croup.

We want every mother to know the croup can be prevented. True croup never appears without a warning. The first symptom is hoarseness; then the child appears to have taken a cold or cold may have accompanied the hoarseness from the start. After that a peculiar cough cough is developed, which is followed by the croup. The time to act is when the child first becomes hoarse. A few doses of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will prevent the attack. Even after a fairly rough has appeared the disease may be prevented by using this remedy as directed. It has never been known to fail. Be sure and 50 bottles for sale by E. C. M. I. Drug Store Dept.
