OGDEN.

OGDEN, UTAH, - NOV. 16, 1894.

Bonsed.

David Dickson, a shoeman from Wyoming on his way to Vancouver, had to stay over a few hours for the 6 p.m. northern train and became the victim of something new. He was relieved of some of his money and Justice Bagley will investigate the case on Saturday.

Not Rolford.

Sheriff Carter with other Sanpete county officials have decided that Roberts, the horsethief, is not R. Roberts, one of the murderers of Sheriff Burton.

SHERMAN MEANT FIGHT.

HIS OFFICERS KNEW IT WHEN HE PUT ON A CLEAN COLLAR.

On the march and in the camp Sherman's life was simply hell, says a writer in McClure's Magazine. He had few intimate companions and moreover was short. The reason had "dry" was his usual ben-quarters, and spent it all his military (work) life together. His dispatches were written mostly with his own hand. He had little office clerks. But Dayton, his adjutant general, was better than a regiment of marks. When he failed somewhere to the woods for his night the general was the busiest man in the army. While others slept his little campfire was burning, and often in the long vigils of the night I have seen a lonely form walking up and down by that fire. Sherman himself slept but little. He did not seem to need sleep, and I have known him to stay but two hours in bed many a night. In later years a slight asthma made sleep impossible for him. After the war, when I was at home in St. Louis, he seldom retired until 12 or 1 o'clock. It was often so late, too, on this march.

It was a singularly impressive sight to see this solitary figure walking more by the flickering campfire while the army slept. It again went all over where in the dance of it so numerous times were heard he would incessantly call one of us to go and find out what it meant. He paid small attention to appearance, to dress almost none.

"There is going to be a battle today, sure," said Col. Anderson of the staff one morning before daylight.

"How do you know?" asked a comrade.

"Why, don't you see? The general's up there by the fire putting on a clean collar. The sign's cent sure."

A battle did take place that day, and Cheney, with forty cannon, fell into our hands. It was more a run than a battle.

Having Come into Clover Made

Twins named McLean from Harnett county, N. C., 80 years old, visited Raleigh on Wednesday on a queer mission. This was to buy enough of which to have their coffin made. They are now in fine health and are the oldest twins in North Carolina. They were quaintly dressed, one having on a richly embroidered vest he has worn for 42 years.—Baltimore Sun.

Grouse Thought to Feed and Smoke.

Not to always a Scotsman to connect that admirable fowl, the grouse, with heather, yet it is a curious fact that heather is by no means the best thing for him. The Sheet means in the world, from the sportsman's point of view, are undoubtedly those of the moor ridge of Yorkshire, and on some of the very best of these, such as the famous "Bishopthorpe," there is hardly any heather at all. In place is taken by the tormentil, on which the grouse feed and well thrive, and moreover in patches to an almost incredible extent.

Another curious fact about your rolling grouse, which seems not generally to have been mentioned anywhere before, is that they do not seem to relish from the nest and young of the moorfowling birds which inhabit on the moors. For instance, the grouse which are shot on the moor almost fledgled are often simply black with nest, yet they are perfectly healthy, and, as a rule, rather above the average size. Apparently, however, these queer conditions, which call the red grouse, are unmagnified to the black grouse, which, though they abound in many parts of Cumberland, are hardly ever found on the moors of the north riding and seem to be the manufacturing districts.—London Globe.

LITERARY NOTES.

Rudyard Kipling will contribute to the Christmas Scribner a long poem entitled "McAndrew's Hymn," in which he shows an entirely new type character to the remarkable list which he has already created. Those who think that he is only successful with Indian types will be surprised at the wonderful figure of his creation of an old Scotch engineer. Howard Pyle will illustrate the poem.

Round the Red Lamp, the new book by Dr. A. Conan Doyle, which has been received with so much favor that the publishers, D. Appleton & Co., were unable to meet the orders received in the first week.
