FROM THE TETON BASIN.

Letter From One of the Boys Supposed to Have Been Killed by Indians.

"VALLEY OF THE TETON," Idaho, Aug. 5, 1895.

Editor Evening News:

In the absence of your valuable paper we notice many an item concerning a party of young men who left their home at Pleasant Grove some time since for the Yellowstone National park, via Jackson's Hole, the seat of the present Indian war(?) Happening to be one of the unfortunate parties on a hunting pleasure trip in new mountains of country during the excitement, it may be interesting to your readers to know something of how "Dick" and the "Indians."

Dick has many admirers acquainted with his location in the country, but few know what kind of a place it is. It is a fully formed or region bounded on the west by the Continental divide, and on the west by the almost impenetrable Tetons. The north and south boundaries are mountains and hills very heavily timbered, making it one of the hardest villages to reach that can be imagined.

Tels unceremoniously, coupled with the severe weather, has kept everything stagnation from all his intended movements and rendered it possible our Tetons to hold her away—so today we find it the next living to the "happy hunting ground" of the red man's dreams. Natur I p nosch therefore we we find him there. For years it has been the place where the Indians, the Lemhis and the Shoshones have found their winter's meat and skins. Would the red men have met of the ways of the paleface, he could take what he needed for food and clothing and be satisfied; but alas he has learned the value of a dollar, and that business will clash that dollar, his great sense is insatiate. Thus ends of decaying carcasses and bleaching bones today mark the trail of the savage—the advent of bounds to the game—the numbers left of the many noble elk, deer and antelope that have been slain by his hand.

Few white have made their homes there and those are now accustomed to a rough life—such as trappers, runners, miners, etc. Most of them are bachelors, so but few women care to spend their lives in such an isolated way. The country is indeed a good one, in which to carry on an Indian war (not the Injun) and a very hard and long fight could the red men make were they so inclined.

Regarding the trouble on hand, it has been from the first a very one sided affair, though the probabilities are not to be laughed at. It was as early as the whites wished to just a trip to the wanton slaughter of game by the reds. The feeling of the Indians was quite thoroughly expressed the other day by old "Lemhi Jim," an Indian of twenty "moons," when he asked, "Do the white man bring the game here?" And it will take much persuasion to convince the Indians that they should not do as they please about it. The opinion of some who should know is that the danger now lies in the Indians taking revenge upon defenseless persons who happen to come their way. They are certainly incensed at the loss of their slaves and people may well "keep their eyes peeled."

LITERARY NOTES.

The American Historical Register (Philadelphia: Porter & Coates) for August is at hand. The number showed a decided advance in merit since it started upon its career, just a year ago. The frontispiece to the midsummer number is the portrait of the military order of the Loyal Legion of the United States. The initial article is the continuation of "Lincoln's Visit to the United States in 1864-65." Told in a sprightly way, with handsome illustrations of some of the private scenes at which he was entertained and portraits of his hosts on the way to and from Boston.

Other articles of the month: "A Historic Review of the Revolution of '76," by Rear-Admiral Rob. C. R. Ml. "Across one of the colonial ship money the revolution," by Mrs. Allen Morris Kelly; the first installment of the recently discovered fragmental book of the First Regiment of the Pennsylvania Line, with details of Colonel Brodhead, and Lieutenant-Colonel Allemang; a sketch and a portrait of Wolfert Gardinier, a Navy skipper, by Rhoda Woodworth, and the genesis of the Dorset or Dutchtown of Maryland. The announcement is made that the September number will contain the updated requirements for membership of all the Patriotic Hereditary societies—The Historical Register Publishing Company, Philadelphia.

Not since "The Anglomaniacs" have there been so clever a society satire as Henry Fuller's "Pilgrims Rise," twice as excellent as the August Cosmopolitan. The problems involved in woman's use of the bicycle are sketched and numerous. Illustrations Mr. Kerr's article will be a series of pose by pre-eminent models. A new sport, more thrilling that anything we to Niagara, more dangerous than ever was saw—need by even Buffalo Bill, is explained in the same issue in an article on "Photographing big game in the Rocky Mountains," before shooti g.

The studio of Miss Ruth Burnham, teacher of Elocution and Physical Culture will for the summer best 66 East, First North. Reception day, Thursdays.
