today that with a view of raising the necessary cash capital to liquidate this indebtedness, he makes his hurried visit to London.

The West Point Military Academy.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—The secretary of war has received the report of the board of visitors to the West Point Military Academy. It is a lengthy document and treats of the subjects discussed in a novel and striking manner. Among the subjects dealt with is whether or not the strength of the corps of cadets should be increased, the board recommending that two additional be selected from each State at large. The board calls attention to the insufficiency of the present preliminary examinations, and strongly condemns the practice of filling professorships at the academy entirely with army officers. It deplores that, while the cadets are fairly instructed in all field movements, certain details are omitted, such as the care of horses, etc. It calls attention to the lack of an army and equipments for field exercises, and particularly the need for modern ordnance.
