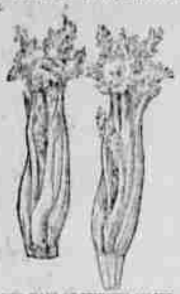
CELERY FOR MARKET.

How It Is Prepared by Gardeners in the East and in the West.

Appearance goes a great ways in the markets, and the shipper of vegetables or fruits cannot take too much pains with his products. If he can make them attractive he will be pretty sure of quick sales and good prices. The Kalamazoo celery, as placed on our markets, always looks odd to us. We think that something is wrong with it, but it is all in the trimming, says Popular Gardening.



TWO WAYS OF TRIMMING CELERY.

People in the east were in the habit of [illegible] celery trimmed as shown at the right of our illustration, and we have learned to like the way, especially as the center of the root part is as good to eat as any other part of the plant. The Kalamazoo people cut the root off square and usually pretty close to the heart, as shown at the left of illustration. This to us looks like mutilation, and we think the growers make a mistake. It may take a little longer to trim the roots off with four cuts than with a single stroke of the knife, but it will pay in the end by making more sales and increasing the demand for their products.

The Outdoor Wintering of Bees.

Mr. W. Z. Hutchinson, a well known Michigan beeman, thus disposes of the question of the outdoor wintering of bees in a letter to Country Gentleman: [illegible]

Mr. Hutchinson further writes that [illegible]

Making Cider.

The later that cider is made, other things being equal, the better it will be and the better it will keep. A good cider apple is hard and sound, with a rich juice and a somewhat decided acid flavor. [illegible]

Here and There.

New York claims to have had this season 30,000 acres devoted to hops. The Farmers' Review places the product of the state at 90,000 bales.

The Kansas sorghum sugar crop will reach, it is believed, at least 3,000,000 pounds.

It is reported that Nebraska will make 8,000,000 pounds of beet sugar this year.

October fairly outdid itself in the Vermont mountains. [illegible]

A recent eruption on the sun's face was photographed and lasted for fully fifteen minutes. [illegible]

The youngest teacher on record is said to be an eleven year-old boy in Kansas, who, it is claimed, has been recently granted a certificate.

Mr. J. T. Lovett says: [illegible]

Not at All Gallant.

"Do you know, Mr. Hicks," said Arabella, the night after Halloween, "I went down stairs last night at midnight with a candle and looked into the mirror to see the face of my future husband reflected there, and—tee-hee—I saw your face!"

"What beastly ridiculous things these Halloween customs are!" said Mr. Hicks.—Harper's Bazar.

Big Hickory Nuts.

The Ailanthus Tree.

The first ailanthus trees grown in America were brought from the far east and planted in the garden of [illegible] on lower Broadway, opposite Bowling green, New York. [illegible]—Exchange.

The Ceremonial Dress in Europe.

[illegible]

Dress Reform.

There is one kind of dress reform that nobody seems to have thought anything about, yet it goes to the root of the whole matter for both sexes. [illegible]

The two opposite courses adopted by the New York and Allegheny presbyteries show how the Presbyterians are divided on the subject of revision. [illegible]

When Edwin Arnold is asked which of all the countries he has visited he likes best he frankly answers, "Japan, by all means." [illegible] "It is the land of poetry, this Japan that I love," says Sir Edwin.

Treatment of Fever Patients.

The old fashioned way of treating fever patients has lived its death along with its innumerable victims. [illegible]—Detroit Free Press.

A Turtle's Considerable Delay.

During a windstorm in the early days of last June a tree on the farm of [illegible] Hamilton, in Jackson county, Ind., was blown down, [illegible]—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

A Student of Human Nature.

Mrs. Slimpurse—Why in the world did you tell Mrs. De Fashion we had summered in Europe?

Mr. Slimpurse—You don't suppose I'd confess to her that we'd been economizing in Frogtown, do you? Not much.
