Shocking Accident to a Young Man—A Rancher's Last Hunt for Gold.—A Fresno (Cal.) Sensation.

Tramps early on Wednesday morning set fire to the barn of John Crawford, a farmer living ten miles north of Bestrice, Neb., destroying several head of valuable horses, several vehicles and farming implements, amounting to $2,500. No insurance.

On Tuesday the Utah Sugar company turned over 150 head of fine beef cattle to the Utah Slaughtering company which the sugar company has been feeding for that company. The cattle were fed on the sugar company's farm on the beach.—Lehi Banner.

There are several panthers in the Haynes slough country, Idaho, and parents are afraid to send their children to school, especially when the little ones have to go through the timber. Some of the residents believe that Andrew Hussey's boy, who disappeared some weeks since from his home on Willasch slough was carried off by a panther. No trace of the child have yet been found. Dallas Mountaineer.

Early on Thursday morning Joe H. Gurule, a mine owner at Las Placitas, arrived at Albuquerque, N. M., and among a lot of convivial companions met Vicente Armijo, an ex-deputy sheriff who has figured in several disreputable crimes. They shook dice at a saloon and got to quarreling. Armijo struck Gurule across the head with a chair and the two clinched. They were parted awhile, when Armijo plunged a pocketknife into Gurule's side three inches below the heart. Gurule died. Armijo is one of the most desperate characters in this section of the country and has killed several men.

One of the most surprising marvels of the age, says the Denver News, is the immensity of the recently developed orange trade of Southern California. From one station, that of Riverside, 1,440 carloads of oranges have been shipped eastward this season, and there are about 700 carloads yet to be shipped. Ten years ago Riverside was without railroads and surrounded by arid, sandy plains of cactus, and its orange orchards were small and scattering. The rapid development of this industry in that recently desert waste indicates what may result from the proposed irrigation canal system in the vicinity of Yuma, Ariz.

Fred Muehane was found about noon on Wednesday in the past house, two miles east of Laramie, Wyoming, with a bullet in the center of his forehead and another through the lower lobe of his left lung. He was alive and conscious. He stated that he had gone to the lonely place the previous day and had first shot himself in the forehead, and, finding that this did not kill him, he attempted to send a bullet through his heart, but, the falling also, he then calmly put the revolver back into his pocket. He was able to walk from the house and get into the carriage twenty-four hours afterward, and was taken to the hospital. The chances are against him living. His strength and consciousness after the bullet in his brain already to be remarkable.

Bud Havens has had an experience in Redwood canyon, Cal., that he will long remember. The lad, accompanied by his dog, went out on a little hunting trip. He wandered about the woods killing game until he had but one cartridge left. He was passing under a small tree when he suddenly spied a wildcat just ready to pounce upon him. The boy, although badly frightened, stood his ground and took deliberate aim at the animal. Just as he fired his last cartridge the beast sprang upon him, and a desperate struggle ensued. The boy's faithful dog came promptly to the rescue and grabbed the wildcat by the throat. The dog's sharp, strong the wildcat was killed. He weighed thirty-two pounds. Young Havens was badly scratched after his battle, and thinks that he would have been killed had it not been for the assistance of his faithful dog.

Holland Farish, the twenty-one-year-old son of T. E. Farish, of Prescott, Ariz., well known all through the west, was accidentally shot and killed Monday night at the Vulture mine. The deceased was found in his bed early next morning by his father with a bullet hole from a 45-caliber pistol through his body. Death must have been instantaneous. Young Farish had been acting as nightwatchman at the mine and mills, and had been carrying the gun. He must have thrown the pistol on the bed at his feet when he went to his room, and when he went to turn in it went off. The pistol was folded in the blankets, showing that limp were turned back when the pistol dropped, but in pulling them up the trigger caught in the blanket and the gun was discharged. He hand rested on the weapon when found. There was not a team within twenty miles, and the body did not reach this city until Wednesday. The deceased was an unusually bright lad, had graduated from the normal school at Tempe, and had taken a course in law, which he expected to resume after a few months' stay with his father and brother at the Vulture.

Not many years ago there was not a better known man in Alameda county than John Lowrie, says the San Francisco Chronicle. He owned a big ranch in Washington township and was a well-to-do farmer. As an investor in mines he had met with some success and owned a large interest in a mine in Alaska. In 1889 he determined to go prospecting and induced some of his friends to accompany him on the trip. The party reached Alaska in safety and from all accounts the men made a good stake, and in a few months they prepared to go home. The ship was laden with treasure and it was a happy party that left Alaska. But the ship never arrived in port. From the day that she left Alaska she has never been heard from. The supposition is that the vessel went down and that all on board were lost. The family of John Lowrie, consisting of a wife and several children, is left waiting so long in vain, at last feel he will admitted to probate and it was judicially announced that Captain Lowrie was dead. For years the estate has been in the courts. The property has increased in value immensely since John Lowrie is rich. Yesterday the widow presented the final account of her trust and asked the court for a distribution. She received on behalf of the estate as her right and the other half she holds in trust for life. At her death it is to be distributed among the children of the decedent.

The sensation in social and religious circles at Fresno, Cal., caused by the Rev. J. H. Collins announcing in a sermon that he has seen one of the ladies belonging to one of the most exclusive societies drunk at a recent party has not abated. Small delegations have visited Mr. Collins and tried to get him to retract or qualify what he had said, but without success. He insists that he made no mistake. He thinks they tried to induce him to name the young woman so saw drunk, so as to remove suspicion from other members of the same society. He refused to do this. Then a well-known member of a large mercantile establishment here, who confessed that the minister's allegation referred to or in some way reflected on the merchant's wife, called on Mr. Collins, and, failing to get any satisfaction in argument, proceeded to get satisfaction in a physical encounter. The minister got the worst of the encounter, and the man parted without blows. Ministers of the various Fresno churches are pouring oil on the troubled waters, but the breaking waves refuse to be calmed. It is said that Rev. Mr. Collins has given his ministerial brethren more trouble than any man has in one occasion, as is reported, he and Rev. W. H. Martin of the Christian denomination were on the point of joining in combat on a that words and were only kept from it by the interference of other ministers, for the frame had the effect of breaking up the ministerial association of Fresno, which had up to that time existed as a sort of union fraternity. All this gossip of church, state and society is again talked over and causes incidently un-Christian in character are freely applied on all sides, while Rev. Mr. Collins answers that he did not come to Fresno to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

When Andrien G. Chanche, the old Front street merchant of San Francisco, was dying, he called his betrothed to his bedside, and they were married in the presence of a few relatives. His will was made a few hours later, and the old man died. What transpired in the room when Mr. Chanche was dying has never been known, and the will was offered for probate on Thursday and this is a great measure gives an inkling as to what the old man thought about in his last hours. The treatment is a singular one. Mr. Chanche leaves an estate valued at $750,000. He bequeaths $10,000 to his niece, Nerie Aral, a resident of Bordeaux, France, and one half of the residue to his young widow. The other half is left to the child or children that may be born as the issue of the union. In case no children are forthcoming the widow shall receive the share provided for them in the will. There is another curious provision which disposes of the estate in case the testator and his wife should be killed while traveling. This provision was made because Chanche had perfected all the arrangements for his wedding tour before he was taken ill. After the old man had made his will wherein he speaks about traveling and children he must have come to the conclusion that he was going to die. A couple of hours after he signed the document he executed a codicil, wherein he requested that he should be buried in his vault in St. Mary's cemetery, beside the remains of his first wife. This codicil was simply made in order to provide for the old man's burial. Mrs. Chanche will now take charge of the large estate, left by her husband. She was an old man's bride seven years and now she is repaid for her fidelity with a handsome income for life.
