BREVITIES.

Men are to have monograms worked on their coat tails.

The name of Abyssinia is derived from a word signifying disorder.

Cutting one's self with scissors may be called "sheer" carelessness.

A love that is not reciprocated — a neuralgic affection.

Be temperate in diet. Our First parents ate themselves out of house and home.

If a bull, a dilemma, and a glass of whisky are placed before you, try not to take either horn.

White silk parasols with feather trimmings are the latest novelty in fashion.

There are 11,000 journeymen printers in Germany and German Austria. Average wages about 80 cents a day.

Of eighty-seven steamships, which leave New York for European ports, but two are owned in America.

Five companies in New York city stored away 12,600,000,000 pounds of ice during the past winter. The ice was gathered from an area of 400 acres.

A Boston collector of curious coins has been petrified by the discovery that his wife innocently bestows his treasure on organ grinders.

A clergyman said he addressed his congregation of ladies and gentlemen as brethren, because the "brethren" embrace the ladies.

Value the friendship of him who stands by you in the storm; swarms of insects will surround you in the sunshine.

A Swiss inventor, it is said, has addressed letters to several European governments, and to our own, stating that he has discovered a motive power which supercedes steam. He asks $10,000,000 for his secret.

A preacher named Opie, reproved one of his elders for falling asleep during service, whereupon the latter retorted that he could not help it while under the influence of such a heavy Opiate.

At a collection lately made at a charity fair, a young lady offered the plate to a rich man who was noted for his stinginess. "I have nothing," was his curt answer. "Then take some, sir," she replied; "you know I am begging for the poor."

An anecdote comes from Paris of an Englishman, who, when out riding, met another who is very deaf. "Riding I see, as usual," screamed the good natured Mr. X; "and how is your wife?" "Just bought her," replied the other; "and, to tell the truth, she is a baddish lot. You know me. I never keep them if they do not suit me, and I shall get rid of her next week."

A man advertised for a wife, and requested each candidate to enclose her carte de visite. A spirited young lady wrote to the advertiser as follows:

"Sir I do not enclose my carte, for tho' there is some authority for putting a carte before a horse, I know of none for putting one before an ass.

The Adams Transcript, tells the following story of a cat:

Last Sabbath a motherly old cat, belonging to one of our ciclzens, left her little family in quiet repose, while she went forth in pursuit of something to eat. On returning, she found them quarrelling. She then very deliberately took the one most eagerly engaged in the combat, by the nape of the neck, and not seeing any convenient place near by, to administer what she considered salutary reproof, went to a neighbor's wood house, where she found a tub of water, upon the edge of which she raised her feet and dropped the kitten into the water. She resisted all attempts to escape, and after repeatedly sousing her in the water till sufficiently punished, she took it again by the neck as before, and carried it back again, doubtless a thorough repentant for the wrong it had done. There has been no contention in the family since.

Of all the different workers in connection with the sea, the diver is perhaps the one whose duties call him to take part in the most melancholy scenes. A diver who, in 1865, explored the remains of the Dalhousie, a vessel which had been shipwrecked on the coasts of Scotland, related a gloomy episode in the history of the great deep. When he went down into the principal cabin, he found a mother on her knees in an attitude of prayer, and clasping her two little ones in her arms, whilst other dead bodies were clinging on by their finger-nails to the beams of the ceiling. These sad scenes are by no means rare in the experience of a diver. Another of these submarine toilers, who had been engaged in searching a sunken vessel on the coast of Ireland, told M. Siebe that when he went into the cabins he often stopped to look at a young woman lying peacefully in one of the berths, whose long dishevelled hair floated about like seaweed with the motion of the water. "I took good care," he added, "not to disturb her in her sleep, nor molest her in her resting place: where could she have found a more peaceful tomb?" I was also told lately of a young officer whose fiance had been lost in a shipwreck when returning from Australia. He heard it mentioned that the divers who were engaged in searching the remains of the ship had found in it the dead body of a young lady; he set himself to work to make himself familiar with this mode of operation, and ultimately descended to the sunken vessel. There, in one of the cabins, he, in fact dispovered the remains of a young girl embalmed by the sea water; one cold, white hand was hanging over the side of the berth, on which glistened her "engaged ring." It was indeed his loved one, and he had at least the consolation of seeing her for the last time.—Divers and Diving.
