THE CHOIR AND BENTER.

Once more we note the importance of Salt Lake City sending a properly equipped choir to take part in the Denver Eisteddfod. There seemed to have been some hitch the past few days in the way of securing sufficient male voices, especially tenors. Many choir members could not get away from their employment as they had anticipated doing, and this endangered the success of the plan. We are pleased to learn that to-day many difficulties have been smoothed aside and the outlook appears quite favorable.

Business men and employes have an interest in this matter, on behalf of the city's fair fame. This is no narrow-up affair, but one in which the city and incidentally the state is concerned. The general reason, connected with last year's Eisteddfod in this city, for Salt Lake having a choral organization at Denver have been noted. The organization was presented, not as a competitor for prizes, but as an important contribution on Utah's part for the success of the event. The arrangements were made, and the greater portion of expenses provided for, the choir bearing the remainder individually. Failure to go now would bring dishonor on the city. From patriotic reasons, business men should extend every reasonable accommodation to prevent such an unfortunate result.

From this time on we hope to hear of no barriers being in the way of the trip, not that all in anyway connected therewith will willingly lend a helping hand, and that the choir will perform its full share in making the Denver Eisteddfod what we ardently hope it will be—a complete and glorious success.

OVER-PROTESTATION.

When people make loud boasts of either their patriotism or their courage, discriminating persons are apt to think there is something suspicious, to say the least, in the motive for such procedure. This seem idea will impress very many thoughtful, conservative people when they read of the Irish Catholic Benevolent Union of America at Wilmington, Delaware, pledging its members to uphold American institutions even to the extent of shedding blood if necessary. So far as the pledge is concerned, it was wholly uncalled for in any patriotic citizen. If the latter's call by his country requires that he lay down his life in defense of the nation or its institutions, he will do so upon his patriotism and not because of any fealty to an inferior organization; and if he has to take up arms against a foe he will do so in obedience to legal procedure and because of his loyalty to the nation's flag, not by reason of a secret society pledge. There is occasion for distrusting the motives of men who indulge in such braggadocio style of resolutions; they question the sincerity and depth of their so-called patriotism by probably too much that they are not to be deemed unpatriotic.

DECLINE IN THE PRICE OF LAND.

Important points are often lost sight of in the heat of political discussions, and the subjects dealt with are consequently partly left in the dark. The question of the cause of the fall in the price of land and the products of the soil is an illustration. The decline is felt in several countries and is chiefly attributed to foreign competition. But how is it that and no deeper origin?

A contributor in the Cosmopolitan thinks it has. He points out that the progress made in chemistry and physical science is such that the value of land necessarily must fall. By this process it has been made possible to supply the consumption and luxuries of life from the mineral kingdom to an extent that has made this a dangerous competitor of the products of the land.

It has been observed that the human family in its search for means of subsistence first turned to the animal kingdom; then to the domain of plant and lastly to minerals. This principle is illustrated in many ways. For instance, to obtain the purple color the ancients were dependent on the little Mediterranean shell fish, and it was so expensive that kings only could afford to wear it. Later the dyeing properties of the Orchella weed were discovered and lastly the beautiful series of purples yielded by coal tar as results of the combination of one of its products, aniline, with other bodies. By this progress one of the most important industries of Tyre, once an important city, was entirely wiped out.

To obtain light people first used the fat of animals; then oil pressed from plants and then coal oil. Wood has been given place for coal and iron. And even clothing is being manufactured to some extent from the products of the mineral kingdom.

Only two years ago a prominent chemist predicted that the time would come when the whole human family would be supplied with all necessaries of life from minerals, and that the surface of the earth would be transformed into flower gardens and parks. Whether this prediction will be fulfilled to the letter, or not, it is certain that by scientific progress the domain of agriculture is steadily being encroached on. The world is surprised to see mallinds, regardless of what the conscientious will be in those whose lives are devoted to the previous case. Against this there can be no remedy except a Chinese wall, excluding all scientific research and its practical application to the affairs of mankind—a relief measure impossible to apply.

PROFESSOR APMADOC.

Certainly Salt Lake City should be much better off in its musical ideas and knowledge because of the visit of Prof. Wm. Apmadoc to this city. This not because all the teachers and students of the divine art in the city listened to the great instructor at the Assembly Hall, for they did not, and to their own loss. Those who did, appreciated the rare enjoyment of the occasion; and those who did not attend were lacking in something of great worth which they must now get second hand. But they will get it in this form, for the appreciation of the audience last evening was so keen that its effects cannot be kept back.

There were many lessons in the songs, readings and remarks that were of value to people generally and to music vocalists in particular which there will be no attempt to review here. But one especially we are constrained to name, because it points to a practical sense of congruent in local choirs and soloists. This is the too common lack of enunciation and of the expression in the song of the underlying sentiment of the words. The professor noted the remedy and taught how to sing with true expression, so that the hymn, anthem or song should impress the hearer with all the force that comes of perfect dramatic and musical rendering. This is vastly more than giving value to the notes of music; it is pouring the soul of the song through the melody into the very heart of the listener—an accomplishment which would bring hymnal singing still closer to the people than it now is.

Prof. Apmadoc leaves this evening for Colorado; but it is not impossible that another year will see him here again. And when he does come we hope that the lessons of his present visit will have found rich soil and borne good fruit, and that with closer acquaintance his high talents will be appreciated even more generally and thoroughly than now.

A FREE SPEECH DECISION.

The decision of Judge Cox of Indiana ought to bring joy to the cartoonist politicians in the capital of that state. The judge says that a man violates no law by discussing politics on the street; and so far as this late statement is concerned none who understand the law will dispute him. But in the light of the circumstances as they appeared to be in Indianapolis, there will be few people who will concede that the judge's ruling touched the real point at issue there, or was any more than a bid for favorite men from the street-corner-audience from which representatives were brought before him. When the corner politicians blocked the street they did something more than exercise the right of free speech which is reserved to all citizens; they interfered with the rights of others. Hence, whatever Judge Cox may say, when politicians or other people close up the ordinary avenues of travel by collecting in crowds thereon, the courts will uphold police in clearing those avenues, not when there is no obstruction to public business, nor have a perfect right under the Constitution to talk of politics, religion, or any other legitimate subject, and no police officer with a pen or sense of his duty will interfere.

HOW TO KILL THE SPARROWS.

The problem of how to kill off a goodly portion of the present so English sparrows that by such a severe tax on orchard and field has penaled our legislators to the extent that in attempting a solution they have offered a very liberal reward for sparrow heads and eggs. Judged by all indications, the office of this beauty is likely to result in much more injury to the public, through the encouraging of boys in robbing nests of all kinds of birds and in destroying or driving off those summers of the feathered tribe which it would be preferable to have remain, than in any good that will come through a check in the increase of sparrows.

In this matter of keeping the sparrow under control, the London Spectator states it as a demonstrated fact that the killings by boys make more severe inroads on other birds than on sparrows, and gives to the common house sparrow the credit for performing the most effective work against the offender. It states that the cat is as much the natural enemy of the young sparrow as of the mouse, and does as a point in favor of this view that in neighborhoods where there were many poor families and cats—for it is given out that poor people keep more cats than rich people—sparrows were reduced to a condition of scarcity. In individual cases rich people's cats were not so effective in this work as the fellow who lives in a poor household, for the reason that they were so well fed that they did not engage freely in poaching; but even with them, when they once tasted sparrow flesh, the spirit was the fascinating and the appetite too strong to resist them of it, although repeated whippings had been tried to obtain this end. It is further noted that the sparrow catchers were not encouraged by their tribes to seize young chickens, eggs, but rather manifested a tendency the other way.

Just how far it would be advisable to encourage the carnivorous tendency of domestic cats in order to keep down sparrows may be a matter of serious discussion to those not particularly favorable to certain characteristics of this member of the feline race; but it is interesting at least to know that there are localities where the excessive fecundity of the English sparrow is neutralized so as to prevent his being an expensive nuisance, as our London contemporary says it has established beyond question there are.

THE CARBONDALE, O., incident, by which children derailed a train with fatal results, as narrated in a dispatch from Canton, suggests that a similar accident is possible on some of the railways running into this city unless greater care is observed. It is quite common for children, and not very small ones either, to place stones and other articles on rails so as to note the effect when the train comes along. These obstructions may be knocked off or thrown over to safety a thousand times, but a different result is always manifest unless the practice is checked.

This is what the Cleveland Plain-dealer says of election day prospects in Ohio:

Here is the situation: Hundreds of thousands of voters, hitherto calling themselves Republicans, Democrats, Populists or Prohibitionists, and voting their party ticket "straight," will this year cast their party ticket and local tickets as heretofore, and call themselves by their old party names, but on the gold-standard question will act independently and vote for Bryan or McKinley according to their views on the money standard.

It is stated that when a water cycle was put in operation at Put-in Bay on Lake Erie a few days ago, an old lady who saw the machine being worked rushed to her friends crying: "A miracle! a miracle! Two Peters walking on the water!"

THE SUCCESS of international arbitration will now take another "round" with a Cuban skirmish or some similar event stirs up the fighting blood of the nations again.

WHEELING to keep up courage will be a popular political pastime from now till November.
