BRINGING THEM TO UTAH.

The grazing lands in the southwestern part of Box Elder county seem to be made the reservoirs of a large quantity of live stock from California, and shipments already have begun. The long continued drought along the coast is the occasion of this movement to Utah, as in the waterworks and pastures of the San Joaquin and Salinas valleys the lack of rain has dried up the feed for sheep and cattle. In consequence of this dearth the Southern Pacific company is carrying cattle from the valleys named at an exceedingly low rate, in order to save the animals from starvation. The former price per carload was $90 to $125; now it is cut down to from $25 to $60. On Saturday the 33d train load of 1,000 cars of sheep was moved from the San Joaquin valley, and other trains will follow from the localities named until the transfer is complete. It is anticipated that the larger part of the cattle will be landed on the Central Pacific lands in northwestern Utah, and from there westward into Nevada. It is estimated that in that section there is sufficient pasturage to provide amply this summer for the stock that is being moved.

Of course there is no objection on the part of Utah people to this traffic being made. On the contrary the California stockmen will be welcomed if this Territory can be the means of saving their herds from destruction, provided the taxes are paid and the laws observed. It is interesting, however, to note that while the cattle and sheep of California men are brought here without objection, those Utah men who have been and are keeping flocks in Colorado and Wyoming are the objects of an extremely hostile movement. There is no complaint that they do not pay taxes and keep the law, MY they do this as well as others. But in Colorado the claims were seized because the animals were owned by Utah men, and in Evanston, Wyoming, so serious from there state, a meeting is called for today to adopt means for crowding out of that state the sheep of Utah men, on the sole basis of their being owned by residents of this Territory. The decisions of Colorado by the Colorado and Wyoming for the Wyoming line seems to be getting quite popular in those states, but in Utah there is no distinction because a man resides in any particular state. If the resident of New York or of California wants his property here he is as welcome as any one else provided he obeys the law; and if he does not he is not protected against because he is a New Yorker or a Californian, but on the ground of his individual act, regardless of his place of abode.

THE CITY'S reputation for honest and fair dealing will not be injured at all if, in the matter of the copper plant bonds, the City Council takes time to examine with the utmost care the contract under which the $25,000 is claimed and is expected to be paid. This scrutiny need not be and should not be directed toward the discovery of a way of evasion of escape; but on the contrary, toward the exaction of the fulfillment of the complete intent and spirit of the bond by all the parties thereunto related. Delay is in no sense dishonest, and there is no need for such haste as certain influences seem concerned all at once to crowd the city into.

THE EARTHQUAKES IN GREECE.

The disastrous earthquake that recently occurred in Greece is among the most notable ones in recent years in that part of the world. The official reports show that the whole coast line from Lepreon to Tisoupolis suffered terribly. In one district alone three hundred people lost their lives, and so the city is turned at the mighty convulsions of nature from the statement that in seven hours not less than 52 shocks were felt. During this committee house tottered and left the surface of the earth heaved like a stormy sea; huge masses of rock were detached from the mountains and hurled into the valleys below with a crash. The manner in the meantime was changed, the shore in some places sinking six feet and allowing the water to rush in, towards a boiling water were spouted forth this sea, and the disturbance was felt more or less in the whole kingdom striking terror to the souls of the inhabitants of palaces as well as of lowly huts. It is during occurrences of this kind that the insignificance of man is realized to cover before.

The dreadful loss recorded by these volcanic disturbances is one not of climate interest. Thirty of Atalanta, for instance, began to mind the terrible myth of the work Atlantis. Questions of that sense, which so shortly and profane to a case, but who was overwhelmed by one of the sudden, whirlpool gulfs apples to her way, which also stopped to pick up and this was effected, her hair and head being the prize of its sea. Atlantis, the capital of modern Greece, a distance the probably made to be in means. Many lives its present natural advantages, is a city with about 40,000 inhabitants. Thebes, now the principal city of Bœotia and formerly city against Alliance in the Peloponnesian war, and whose inhabitants were later sold into slavery by the great Alexander, when he razed quarter in razing the pre wales which is the destruction of the energy of Greece, is now a city of 5,000 inhabitants.

The whole region bears evidence of former disturbances of a similar kind, and according to the local records, the residents in earth still continue, causing the intermittent people to fear that perhaps the worst is not yet seen. The prince of Sparta taken by King George and his family to escape the distress of the people and the expression of personal sympathy will add to the popularity of the royal family in the little kingdom, although the king is not a native of Greece, but of far away Denmark.

IT WAS FULLY JUSTIFIED.

The jurisdictional question raised by the government taking a train in the appreciation of the "industrials" who shipped and captured a train in only one of those quickies which seize every time the national authority does something that it has previously had no occasion to do. It not only has the effect but it is its aim to strengthen the hands of its agents and their representatives (those armed with pieces) and see that orders therefrom are obeyed, no matter whether the government of the state in which violations occur calls for aid or not. Furthermore, the line on which the trespass occurred is a carrier of the United States mail and whether or not the particular train "held up" has mail on board, we can all understand how the detention of one train might occasion delay to others, on some of which would be entirely to mail matter. It is the detaining part of a piece of mechanism, a general derangement is likely to result; and so now to countenance of men has the right to cause obstructions or otherwise menace the free action of the postal service.

A GOLD HUNTER.

There has been a great variety of treasure seekers in this part of the country, from the hardy miner who uncovers the precious metal in the mountain side to the dreamer who imagines the precious metal in the mountain side to the dreamer who imagines the precious metal in the mountain side. Not much unlike the latter is the claim of E. P. Mazey, who is on his way from Spokane, state of Washington, to Lewiston, Idaho. Mr. Mazey says he is going into the mountains near the latter place to search for a vein of treasure which his uncle, Hugh Mazey, left him was hidden there. This uncle had considerable experience as a scout and trapper in various parts of the country, and died a short time ago, confiding his secret to his nephew, as the latter says.

The story is that in 1877 or 1878, when this uncle was on the Snake river, in southern Idaho, he was among some Blackfoot Indians under the leadership of a chief called Little Dog. The savages were camped near a mountain pass, awaiting an emigrant train with the intention of stealing it. Mazey tried to dissuade them from their purpose, but without avail. The emigrants were driven into ambush, massacred and plundered. After the deed had been done, the Indians assigned themselves into which they entered and made a bonfire of the train. In one of the wagons however, they found a box which a lock square in which were some papers and other items, and a great amount of $20 gold pieces, the combined capital of the emigrants, amounting to many thousands of dollars. The Indians, it seems, did not know what these yellow pieces, but knew the box, and were very fearful to induce the chief Mazey to bring the troublesome to members, so he secreted the box the Winds under some stones, where it is supposed it have lain ever since.

Considering that the story is fairly in some essential features, such as the whereabouts of the emigrant train at the time reported to, it is not improbable that there is some truth in the story. Mazey is not a man to go on a search that is purely romantic, so he is putting up a substantial bankroll. A few years ago another Spokane people are not likely to take Little Dog's word in the duty of the Indian son of gold.

FINAL CONTRACTS for the fiscal year of the United States for the year ending, of the value of $13,000,000, so increased over 1892 of $4,000 values, worth $1,000,000. In the following table, which shows the production of the various states in the census and a comparison with the output for 1892, the value of the product may be found by multiplying the number of ounces by $20.67.
