WORK IN THE COURTS

Mrs. Wayne Tells of Her Domestic Woes.

ADDIE HENLOW WANTS A DIVORCE

Action Against the Mosers Estate—Park City Contempt Case—Other Legal Business.

Mrs. Wayne was in Commissioner Greenman's court today, and related her trials and troubles with her husband Wm. Wayne, the special object being to determine whether or not the husband was likely to put an end to his wife's existence. Mrs. Wayne told how her husband had frequently threatened her life during the 15 years they had lived together. Lately she has been compelled to leave him, and the other night he came to her new place of abode and renewed the threats. She now fears that she is afraid he will carry them into effect, and kill her, unless placed under restraint. Her story regarding this episode was corroborated by other witnesses.

Mr. Wayne urged as a reason for being displeased with his wife on the particular occasion named that she had robbed his home of everything, which she denies, charging him with taking things that belonged to her, breaking dishes and smashing furniture generally, especially when he got drunk.

While the hearing was going on a son of the couple, about five years old, was playing around the courtroom, and often went to his mother, but paid little attention to the father. The latter moved about uneasily during the inquiry. The couple have four children, three of which are with the mother.

Commissioner Greenman thought Mrs. Wayne was in danger, and required her husband to give bonds to keep the peace.

HE DESERTED HER.

The morning business in the Third district court's office today started out with the filing of a divorce suit, in which Addie Henlow asks for a dissolution of the marriage tie between herself and Walter Henlow. The parties were married at Brighton, Salt Lake county, October 8, 1893, and a few months thereafter—January 15, 1894, the husband departed. Mrs. Henlow asserts that such desertion was without provocation on her part, and asks for a decree liberating her from the relationship which has existed.

GENERAL COURT ITEMS.

Judge Bartch disposed of the following cases in the Third district court today:

Utah National Bank vs Isaac Sears et al; judgment on promissory note heretofore entered, set aside.

In the case of C. E. Wantland et al, leave to amend complaint was filed.

J. R. Walker vs William Lowe, administrator of the estate of George A. Meears; demurrer entered. In this case the deceased had signed notes for the Morgan Mining company without authority. Witnesses testified to this fact and judgment for plaintiff was entered as prayed.

Fred King vs Jennie M. King; thirty days allowed to serve statement on motion for new trial.

In the case of Horsley vs Horsley, divorce case, a continuance was granted for one week, with the understanding that each party be restrained from interfering with the other. This was necessary because the parties are dwelling in the same house, and it is alleged that the husband frequently disturbs the peace of the wife, who is suing for divorce, and asks temporary alimony.

The case of McCune vs Harrington, motion to confirm report of referee continued to July 5th.

In the suit of Joseph Baumgarten vs the executor and heirs of Alice Brazier Young; foreclosure of mortgage for $1,200 was granted.

In the case of Wagner vs Peterson, in which Henry Shields and one other witness were ordered to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt for failing to observe the order of court, was continued to July 8th, as Judge Merritt made the order and Judge Bartch declined to interfere. The parties alleged to be in contempt assert that they did appear as ordered; but this the referee and other parties deny.

New England Loan & Trust company vs Buffalo Park Land company; hearing upon showing of cause for the appointment of a receiver continued to July 6th.

John Beckman et al vs R. H. Westfield et al; set for trial Monday, July 1st.

A TRIP TO THE PARK.

Scenery by the Way—Appearance of Park City—Branch of the Church—The Ontario.

Editor Deseret News:

For the first time during my long residence in Utah I, on Sunday, June 23rd, visited Park City. As the Union Central train swept southwesterly toward the mouth of Parley's Canyon, I was reminded of the idea of heaven expressed some years since by one of our prominent bonanza—"Salt Lake City on a clear morning in June." This is a natural thought and it embraces a tinge of poetry [illegible] elemental truth. [illegible] the beautiful [illegible] the view from the train, looking [illegible] was enchanting [illegible] the natural [illegible] [illegible] with the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] magnificent city and [illegible] the [illegible] of the picture [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] a [illegible] of land and the [illegible] of the [illegible] progressive [illegible].

RETROSPECTIVE AND PROSPECTIVE.

The sight caused the mind to [illegible] to the more [illegible] and to compare them with the present [illegible] of expansion and development. This resulted in stirring up a sentiment of wonder at the marvelous transformation, and caused a vivid recollection of a prediction which I heard uttered by President Brigham Young regarding the future of this western paradise: "The time will come when this will be one of the greatest cities of the earth. It will fill this entire valley southward to the point of the mountain. Its water supply will then come from Utah Lake—a reservoir provided by God for the purpose. From that source it will be brought in [illegible] along the base of the mountains on the east and west." [illegible] [illegible] grasped the future [illegible] as if it were an already established fact, while those of more ordinary [illegible] are only now beginning to see the possibility of its fulfilment [illegible]. There are [illegible] to be seen everywhere in [illegible] of [illegible] beauty, especially from the [illegible] through [illegible] a wide variety of [illegible] within comparatively narrow space. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] "Yes, pretty good." [illegible] and says [illegible] [illegible] Park, [illegible] [illegible]. It was from the mouth of Parley's that I first caught sight of the city of the Saints. It was on October 1st, [illegible] after a [illegible] journey which commenced at the port of London on May 23rd, of the same year. [illegible] one thousand miles of it performed mostly on foot, wearing the plains and through the rivers of the Great West. This was also on a Sunday morning, and, as were my fellow pilgrims, I was [illegible], weak and weary. The [illegible] wound me up for a few moments. I took off my [illegible]. [illegible] [illegible] hat and waved it in the air. I tried to accompany the movement with a shout of gladness, but something hard and [illegible] in my throat and barricaded the sound, while, as steadily downward towards the [illegible] the liquid [illegible] tell the tale that in spite [illegible] the grown man is not so far removed from the soft and sentimental child. But why should anyone be ashamed of that we which [illegible] has been placed [illegible] the [illegible] of divinity. Is it not written?—"Jesus wept."

THE CANYON.

The ride through Parley's is, as in all mountain gorges in this section region, full of interest to the admirer of nature in its more rugged forms. It brings into view its [illegible], frowning, stormy features, grandeur, by alternating lovely glades, which smile, while the sunlight dances in the [illegible] foliage, and the music of the bubbling mountain brook is an appropriate accompaniment. Through this pleasing panorama we hasten on till we reach

PARK CITY.

This noted mining town is a revelation to the resident of Utah who sees it for the first time. It is situated on slopes [illegible] that all directions except at the lower end of the camp.

At first sight it seems as if its people had begun the initial stage leading toward the objective point of becoming "cliff dwellers." Main street runs up with on a somewhat steep grade in the direction of the location of the mines, while the houses on either side [illegible] along the mountain sides, some of them on points of elevation that involve no small amount of climbing. The great altitude renders the atmosphere unusually rare and therefore not favorable to lung expansion. But this is counteracted by the steeps that have to be traversed by a large majority of the people in order to reach their homes. Western mining towns are not noted for architectural excellence. The Park is no exception to the rule. But generally speaking the domiciles of the people are comfortable, and the population seem to be provided with employment. The chief business street has an active air, and there is no external appearance of anything in the shape of discouragement.

L. D. S. SABBATH SCHOOL.

When I arrived the Latter-day Saints' Sunday school was in session. Although but a brief time was spent there, it was sufficient to enable the visitor to learn that it has many points of excellence. Among these are, a large and regular attendance of beautiful and intelligent children and youths of both sexes; an excellent graded organization, including four classifications; exceptionally good discipline, resulting in the maintenance of good order. The superintendent, O. J. Call, by profession a school teacher, is an efficient officer and is aided by an active and capable corps of assistants.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES.

It happened on the particular Sunday I spent at the Park that a baseball match was on between the local nine and the [illegible], it seems this was a [illegible], and probably affected the attendance at the afternoon meeting, at which, however, the large majority of the Saints of the branch were present.

The attendance at the evening service was so large that it considerably exceeded the capacity of the hall in which it was held. A number who were unable to gain ingress [illegible] at the [illegible] of the [illegible]. I believe that [illegible] the larger portion of the [illegible] were non-members of the Church, and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. A number of [illegible] [illegible] their intention of being [illegible] at an early date, and the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] is a good work. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE ONTARIO MILL.

Next morning Mr. George W. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] crushing, roasting, washing, settling and separating, until finally the specific [illegible] silver, divested from all its crude [illegible] of materials. While deeply interested in the exhibitions of the wonderful skill of man in subduing the elements and subordinating them to his use and convenience, I confess that I was somewhat pleased to escape from the mill, as I experienced a sensation of having gone through at least two processes of reduction—drying and roasting—and I was more than willing to be separated from it. The heat in the building, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] order of [illegible]. The noses of the machinery supplied [illegible] [illegible] part, while [illegible] [illegible] around with long-handled [illegible] were [illegible] [illegible]. The latter presented an odd appearance. The nose and mouth of each was covered by a [illegible] to a contrivance which in form resembles the snout of a hog, perforated at the end. This is to prevent the arsenic and noxious gases from being inhaled by the industrious toilers, whom I found to be uniformly courteous and gentlemanly. In the [illegible] of this [illegible] a sponge is inserted to render the prevention of inhalation more complete.

THE ALLENDALE PUMPING PLANT.

We next visited the office, where we found Mr. George Gibbs, an old resident of this city, who has been employed at the Ontario for about nineteen years. He accompanied us to the vicinity of shaft No. 3, where I had the pleasure of inspecting the pumping plant, which includes a Cornish pump of the most advanced make and massive proportions ever [illegible]. This feature of the [illegible] works was of great interest. Everything associated with it is on a mammoth scale. The plant cost half a million dollars, but has been shelved by the introduction of a "better way" of getting rid of the underground waters which hamper mining operations. As [illegible] Mr. [illegible] would have said, the whole pumping outfit has gone into "innocuous desuetude."

NUMBER THREE.

I was introduced to Mr. Matt Connor, foreman of the Ontario mine. He is one of the most capable and alert practical miners in the west. Although it was not visiting day and it was not very convenient to lower strangers into the mysterious depths, he directed shift boss [illegible] to dress me in a rubber jacket and sou'wester hat and take me down. We went down we went, passing the several levels until we reached a point one thousand feet below the surface. We had the pleasure of walking in a tunnel a distance of 800 feet and examining the stoping ore at various points as we passed along. After being satisfied with the duration of the one subterranean peregrinations we were taken to the surface.

THE GREAT DRAINAGE TUNNEL.

Later we descended shaft number two, and at a depth of 1,500 feet inspected one of the drainage tunnels, the existence of which dispenses with the pumping plant. It is three miles long. A large volume of water rushes through it and dashes out at the mouth and down the side of a mountain. The visiting party, which now included two gentlemen from Indiana, and one formerly of that state but now of Salt Lake, walked along the tunnel about half its distance, and were treated to a number of shower baths, which were not ecstatically enjoyed, on the trip. There is a perpetual draft in the tunnel, and as the party turned to retrace all the candles went out. Fortunately I had a lantern, and therefore led the retreat. The tallest man in the party was fortunate in having a stiff hat, otherwise his head instead of his hat would probably have been cracked by several collisions with the supporting timbers. Discovering that the time for the departure of the train was approaching, all possible haste was made to the station.

THE MINE, THE TOWN AND THE LEADING SPIRIT.

I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. R. C. Chambers while at the mine, and I am indebted to him for marked courtesy. It is appropriate to remark that the Ontario is the source of the existence of Park City, and the Ontario and Park City are inseparable from the personality of Mr. Chambers. He has done more to build up both than all other persons combined, and there is no greater evidence of his excellent qualities of head and heart than the esteem in which he is held by all classes of people in the Park.

I proposed saying something in relation to observations taken on the return trip, but this correspondence is, in all conscience, sufficiently drawn out.

JOHN NICHOLSON.

DOWN WITH THE FLAG.

[illegible]

"This boy [illegible] the flagstaff and remove the British flag!"

The [illegible] was dismissed by a [illegible]. He looked the boy over from head to foot [illegible].

"You look [illegible]. You have climbed before, have you?"

"Yes, sir," replied Johnny, blushing. "If you would [illegible] to take the flag down, I would do my best."

"You [illegible] you look capable of doing it," and with another salute the [illegible] and marched the delighted boy back to the parade ground.

The crowd [illegible] about the flagstaff [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

Not only [illegible] the departing British [illegible] their flag to the pole, but they had knocked off the [illegible] and greased the staff so as to make it hard to climb.

Johnny Van [illegible] set to work. He had brought with him a lot of sand, and by [illegible] [illegible] and applying the sand [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the pole [illegible] the cleats of the [illegible].

As he neared the top of the tall flag pole a strange [illegible] seemed to fall over the crowd below. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

"Look, he [illegible] now," said a voice [illegible]. [illegible] the flag. He [illegible] it loose. There, the boy is [illegible] it [illegible] [illegible].

He [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] from every throat.

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

"I told the general I thought I could bring it down," he said to the officer who stepped forward to take the captured banner.

In another [illegible] he was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and carried him [illegible] across the parade ground.

In a little while another flag floated from the flagstaff of [illegible], but it was not the standard of the king. It was the stars and stripes of the young nation which had [illegible] its right to have a flag by seven years of war.

And while it floated there the last British vessel vanished, and New York held no soldiers but those who would henceforth [illegible] it.

Johnny Van Arsdale lived a good many years after his daring act in lowering the last British flag, and more than once he was pointed out in crowds as the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] of freedom take its place.—Boston [illegible].
