The classified advertising columns on this page of the "News" are steadily growing in popularity. They form the best possible medium of information and reference between advertisers in special lines and that big part of the public which is often in need of such information and in ignorance of where to find it.

The annual meeting and banquet of the Utah Press association will occur at the Knutsford hotel, this city, on Tuesday, the 17th inst. Officers for the ensuing year will be elected, and the usual lubrication and other important matters discussed. A cheap excursion will also form a part of the day's exercises.

This evening, at 7:30 o'clock, the Book of Mormon class will meet in the lecture hall, at the Tabernacle. The struggles of the Nephite army, with Moron as chief captain, to maintain liberty, the aggressive action of Ether and Lehi, and the final defeat of the Nephites, which always closes the cause of defeat on the part of the Nephites, will be discussed by Prof. Mills. All are cordially invited.

In the Twenty-first ward, entertainments and benefits are so numerous as to such an that there is not a night between now and the middle of April that the evening house will not be in use. It will even be necessary to put some daylighting, such as on next Friday evening, when the ward chapel gives a dance that will be preceded by a concert and entertainment for the benefit of Elder Castleton, who leaves for the Southern States on the following morning.

The fire department indulged in two runs yesterday, without turning out a drop of water. Mrs. E. H. Corbett of 22 First street found her collar full of smoke; she gave an alarm and a few minutes later the fire ladies swept around the corner at a lively gait. Development showed that a chimney sweep and but a chemical were all that was needed. At 4:30 last evening the hose again turned out to answer an alarm given at box 45, corner of South Temple and U streets. Somebody who has a Hansen's key in his pocket and poses as a wit, was putting up a game on the hero, who returned to headquarters in a wrathful mood over the false alarm.

Fourth Temple street, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, was treated to an exciting roller accident, that for a couple of minutes looked like amending the proportions of a hospital case. Two gentlemen, whose names could not be learned, were in a single horse cutter, and driving a chestnut horse; they attempted to cross in front of a street car, at the intersection of Second South and E streets. The runners of the sleigh hit the track obliquely; in an instant the cutter was upside down, six feet of the occupants sliding to the middle of the road some dozen feet away. While a pair of feet and a lapsoke sticking out of the overturned sleigh denoted that the driver was staying with his steed. The horse ran for about fifty yards and stopped by pedestrians when the track bounced John was hauled out, none the worse for his uncomfortable position.

SIX MEN GATHERED IN.

Police Circumvent a Tough Gang of Alleged Sheepstealers.

Lively Race with the Patrol Wagon on the West Side of Town Yesterday.

The police have made another good haul. It came off yesterday, and all concerned, including the patrol team, had an exciting run. Some twenty-seven miles were covered by the officers, and six new tenderfoot lodgers are registered at the city hall and a heavy haul of stolen property rejoices at police headquarters in consequence.

To John C. Hacker, the sheepman, who resides at Orangeville, may be ascribed the honor of locating the gang that was so well named the hair.

Early yesterday morning some counting up his stock, he found that some parties or party had rounded up twenty contrary, as he put it at the time, and had accomplished a raid and eight head of sheep.

Where tracks in the snow led from his yard to a house about half a mile west of Sen. Gov. Q. Cannon's residence. He followed the same and proceeded to an adjacent barn to investigate. He was met at the door by Jack Richards. Hacker did not enter the building, as Richards, who owned the premises and Morton Curtis, brought a double-barrelled shotgun and ran revolvers to close peculiarly with his anatomy. Hacker left the premises and proceeded to the city, and advised him not to hand for town. Hacker made a detour and with all speed laid the matter before the police.

Sergeant Hilton and Detective Goodman came down from town in the patrol wagon. Upon the wagon's nearing the barn, Richards was dashed making tracks some 400 yards ahead. This followed a parley race and the officers held on while the team made a record run. Richards was a good sprinter but Hacker, he was overhauled and made to throw up his hands and was ultimately gathered in. As the chance that he had just left, was found an old man named B. Y. Lewis, who shared a similar fate. A search of the premises revealed eight dressed sheep, still warm from the butcher's knife, and the evidence of their slaughter near at hand. Cached in and around the place were harness, pieces of harness, a saddle, a gun, a Winchester and a job lot of articles that had evidently been stolen. These were loaded up on the wagon and all concerned returned to the City Hall. In the meanwhile Hilton and Detectives Sheets and Dunlap, accompanied by Mounted Officer Shannon, rounded the man hunt.

At the home of the Curtis boys, 56 south, Eighth West street, Raymond Curtis and C. Wilson were run down. Shannon took the duo under his wing while the officers searched the premises, and reported that some of the stolen sheep were found in the out-house. The searchers then visited the home of Jack Richards, 59
