ELEVEN MEN ARE DEAD

And Seven More Wounded During a Bloody Election Riot.

ARMED MEN HUNT DOWN NEGROES.

Heads of Families are Compelled to Leave the Country at the Muzzle of Loaded Guns.

Greenwood, S. C., Nov. 10.—Five negroes lie dead at Hobcaw's Mill, along the roadside, another was killed there and likely four others were shot and left in the woods. One white man was killed, three others hit at the same place, and four more have gone out of sight, and four more have been left for dead. Four heads of families have left the country and armed troops are patrolling the county.

Disturbances are occurring the county during the day of the election riots. The following is a list of the dead and wounded:

J. C. Hinnebar, white, killed at polls.
Thomas Tolbert, white, mortally wounded at the same time.
Bob Hampton McGhinty, killed.
Isaac Williams.
Bertha Watts.
Lon Jackson, all colored, killed yesterday.
Jack Harrison.
Jim Collins, colored, killed today.

WOUNDED.

Allen Tolbert, 12 years old, dangerously.
Jack H. Tolbert, white, collector of the port at Charleston and chairman of the Republican state executive committee, slight.
Frank Miller, white, mortally wounded in back.
J. Frierson, white, shot in shoulder.
M. J. Tolbert, shot in foot.
Crate Abercrombie, who tried to prevent the outbreak, shot in the neck.

In addition to these two and likely four others are reported to be shot in the woods near where the five below lie killed.

The trouble was precipitated on election day, when two or three hundred negroes at the polls opened a fusillade on the crowd in which the young white man was killed. In the fight Hinnebar was killed and Tolbert wounded. The negroes then fled in the woods, saying they were hunting the slayers of Hinnebar who had hide into and shot Miller, Tolbert wounded and Fleming badly.

The coming of the negroes at the polls in Ninety-Six, Greenwood, the first county outside, all conceived to kindle a flame of passion, and when that spark was fired in the woods it fell where it fell. Some reporters have been in Ninety-Six and two others are said to have embraced in taking part in the phenomena.

The incident of the day was the killing of Sam Harrison. Down the road from the scene of Hinnebar's death two with Harrison marching ahead, each gun and rifle drawn on him. Where was then the man who had killed the negro was not out in the road and had to go toward a pile of fresh dead negroes. He stopped. There was a ring of rifles and Harrison pitched forward and Hinnebar, it is believed, was avenged of the wrong that killed Ellington.

Crowds were not searching all day to the negroes, who, it is said, participated in the rioting. The whites are certainly determined never to be defeated and thrown responsible for the outbreak. A party went to Mt. Moriah, but it was one party and there were not to kill a wounded and dying man.

J. H. Tolbert, collector of the port at Charleston, and Joe Tolbert left the county and went to Charleston. Hinnebar was the guest of the Tolbert family when he came to Greenwood with friends. He was on his way home, and this, with the pion, he is a non-partisan, has been called a wife, alone has saved his life. A committee waited on J. H. Tolbert, assured protection in Charleston and asked him to go out of that town. He left. Several in the city have received letters from Tolbert's friends, but better advice prevailed.

Very few men accosted the country side armed. Some have come in, but some stayed, hoping to find the body of a negroes and to be congratulated by the sheriff.

The Tolbert side of good family, with the Hinnebar, authors and have been Democrats ever since the war.

The Hinnebars seem to have lived peaceable this afternoon and evening, but they are in a temperament. The Tolbert party armed and are prepared to rendezvous at any moment, and the sheriff and militia were guarded all night. The two regrets when it is known to have shot Hinnebar have not yet been captured.

Many negroes have been tracked with two weeks' time in neighboring counties.

Joe Collins, colored, was killed today near Phoenix. He is said to have been shot and which tells the Hinnebar and reached for another weapon. Five have been received that the sheriff and another posse met Phoenix this afternoon at five o'clock. He was on his Dutting and he was taken to the Greenville riots and the killing of Hinnebar.
