

BLACKHAWK WAR VETERANS MEET.

Have Big Time at Payson Where They Were Addressed by Governor Cutler.

EARLY INDIAN TROUBLES.

How They Had to be Met by the Utah Pioneers in Days of Many Dangers and Hardships.

The Blackhawk War Veterans had a stirring and enthusiastic reunion at Payson on Thursday. The meeting was attended by Gov. Cutler and members of his staff. The governor was called upon to make the principal address. Speeches were also made by Col. Kessler, Col. Hansen and Lieut.-Col. Daynes. The governor spoke as follows:

In greeting the veterans of the Blackhawk War, I am forcibly reminded of the days which this gathering commemorates, with their noble endurance and stress and labor and anxiety. And I am pleased to see that so many of the veterans are still with us, to enjoy the peace and prosperity their toils and sufferings were instrumental in giving us.

DIFFICULT PROBLEMS.

The early settlers of Utah had a great many difficult problems to solve. These problems involved conditions entirely different from those in which they had been accustomed in the east. Among these may be mentioned long distances from the source of supplies, necessitating the making of provisions for their own needs, scarcity of rainfall, necessitating irrigation; long distance from building timber, necessitating the substitution in large measure of other materials; and other difficulties equally great. But, through the wisdom and statesmanship of Brigham Young and his associates, these problems and difficulties were met successfully, and solved to the incalculable benefit of Utah and the entire west.

None of these problems was more complex, or the solution more difficult, than the treatment of the Indians. It involved a most delicate situation, because of the temper of the Indians, caused by their treatment at the hands of settlers on other portions of what they considered their own lands. Yet this difficulty was overcome and this problem solved, as wisely as the rest.

INDIAN POLICY.

In meeting any difficult condition, and solving its attendant problem, the first thing necessary is to find the key to the situation. The key to the solution of the Indian difficulty was found in the words of Brigham Young, "It is better and cheaper to feed the Indians than to fight them." Truer and better words than these were never uttered on the Indian situation. They are in harmony with the Christian civilization of the day and with the broadest principles of humanity and statesmanship. With his great wisdom and foresight the pioneer leader grasped the difficult situation and found and made known the key by which it would be solved wisely, efficiently, and humanely.

WHITE ENCROACHMENT.

It was hard for the Indians to understand the encroachment of the white race on the lands, which they had always been in undisturbed possession of. It was therefore, perfectly rational that they should resist the advances of their domain. For the good of the country, however, and the advancement of civilization, it was the duty of the white man to come into the west and subdue it. The great tracts of land had already been laid out under the appropriation act of the red man. It was intended to fill a higher destiny than the supplying of his hunting grounds and fishing streams. Industries were to flourish, factories were to be established, railroads and highways were to be built, mines to be opened, the desert was to blossom into fertility and productivity. To the accomplishment of the high destiny, the substitution of the control of the whites for that of the Indians was the first essential.

WAR OR PEACE.

There were two ways in which the possession of these lands by the white men could be accomplished, one was to make bitter war on the Indians, and mercilessly overcome them; the other was to meet them fairly and conciliate them. The fruits of the first of these methods have always been and always will be bloodshed, hatred, and bitter enmity of other nations, peace and friendship. Brigham Young and his associates wisely chose the latter course. They conciliated the Indians, and treated them as brethren, and won their friendship. They not only fed the Indians, but they taught them the arts of civilization, industry, peace and friendship. They not only fed the Indians, but they taught them the arts of civilization, industry, peace and friendship. They not only fed the Indians, but they taught them the arts of civilization, industry, peace and friendship.

ALL NOT GOOD.

But not all Indians are good to Indians, even when treated right. There are renegades in all tribes, and the Indians of Utah were no exception. Conspicuous among the promoters of bad feeling between the Indians and the whites was Blackhawk, the renegade Indian chief of Utah. In return for the kind treatment he and his tribe received from you pioneers, he invited his hand to deeds of lawlessness and violence against you. They attacked your settlements, drove off your stock, destroyed your crops, and committed acts of personal violence and even murder. You pioneer friends had not deserved such treatment. You had done your duty by the Indians, and you understood it, and they had suffered no wrong at your hands, which even according to the strict law of Indian revenge, could be considered worthy of the goods of violence they committed. In such circumstances, Brigham Young and you, his associates, did not hesitate in following the path of duty. If Indian fighting was to be done, you were willing to do it, and to do it wisely and well. To protect your homes, your wives, your children, your property, then became as great a duty as to be kind to the Indians when they appreciated kindness. Under such circumstances, to hesitate would have been criminal.

THE CALL OF DUTY.

Called to this duty, you left your homes, your plows, your workshops, and changed the arts of peace for the virtues of war. You met the Indians on their own ground, and fought them in their own way, without their acts of unnecessary cruelty. There were no laws of military science, no book of tactics, to guide you in your difficult undertaking. With a trustworthiness to meet, you were placed at a disadvantage, and strange conditions of warfare necessitated the highest kind of skill and strategy, mingled with bravery and forbearance. These qualities you displayed in large measure, and thereby you won your way against great odds, and brought to a successful and happy termination, what might have been a bloody and destructive Indian war. Then, when the hostile Indians had been subdued, and there was no further need of your services in camp and field, like the veterans of our Civil War, you returned in peace to the homes you had risked your lives to protect, and took up the work of peace and productivity where you had laid it down.

DID BRAVE WORK.

It is no wonder, then, that we who enjoy the fruits of the work you did so nobly should show you honor and respect. It will to add my feeble tribute of praise and gratitude to those bestowed upon you by others who have addressed you in these circumstances. And I wish also to commend the purpose of holding these reunions. Veterans of all noble causes, survivors of all great dangers, do well to meet occasionally and revive the memories of the past, and rejoice in the peace and prosperity of the present. I am glad, therefore, to meet you here, and to congratulate you on the work you did, and his happy outcome, and wish you increasing honor and peace in your declining years. He who presided over your destinies on the field of battle, parades, as well, over your lives and labors in the path of peace. To Him your labors have been acceptable, and by Him they have been sanctified to the untold benefit of coming generations.

I hope you will enjoy, without stint, the fruits of your arduous and unselfish labors.

PATERSON'S MAYOR.

William H. Belcher, of Paterson, N. J., has turned out to be a hard man. He has been missing over two weeks with some of the city's money and with loans he has made from the business men of the city. He was always considered a model man. He took great interest in the schools and the children, and would visit the different schools and preach honesty. Bank examiners are going over the accounts of the Mayor's Building and Loan association, so they can find just how much the mayor got out of the association. From examination already made, it is said that the sum which reached $15,000. Mr. Belcher has left his wife almost penniless, and she seems as anxious as the officials that he is captured.
