VISIONS.

Visions come and go again,
Leaving in their airy train
Just a glimpse, soft and low,
Of their sweet music to and fro—
Something like an old refrain.

'Tis the way with summer skies
'Tis the way with joy and love
'Tis the way with all we love
Of the lives of mortal men;
Just to come, but to go again.
—M. N. Rimoch in Harper's Weekly.

Music, Welsh and Morgan.

During two American friends stopping with me, we thought a side Welsh girl from Dolgelly was evening to sing to them the national songs. Miss Bessie Roberts, a sweet, pretty young lady and excellent singer, was over an immense audience of Welsh people and Welsh who is a very sensitive musician, made many remarks on the peculiarities of the Welsh scale, etc. Suddenly she exclaimed: "I cannot think what music it is that I know that these Welsh have so much sensation. Hear it in Bangor" and she proceeded to hum three or four typical Bangor songs. Miss Roberts and all of us instantly recognized the similarity of these with the Welsh, especially the called Welsh, songs which she had been singing.

Most is not very much surprised when I told her that Professor Boyd Dawkins believed in the original identity of the Bangor and just Welsh. Welsh, a theory of which she was quite ignorant, so that her testimony to the similarity of the national music was entirely spontaneous.

I am not musical, and my opinion is of no value, but there does appear to me to be in the old Welsh music, as in a great deal of the Welsh character, a distinctly non-Aryan episodic character, irreducible to the more so dear to the Saxon soul. The music goes on for a few bars with some, comparatively simple melody, or at a subdued pitch; then suddenly, as if tired of it, bounds off among the bodies, hop, skip and jump and never comes back!—London Academy.

Stopped the Miracles.

The tomb of Saint Etienne de Muret, canonized in 1588, in the Abbey of Grandmont, was so plied with offerings on account of the number of miracles that the religious were completely worn out by the rush of visitors. The prior decided, however, a very simple but effective remedy for this grievance. Relating himself to the tomb he spoke as follows: "Servant of God, we provided you in the delights of colonels and put you wounds in our retreat as many people as it is now a market of a fair. We are sufficiently provided of your sanctity not to be curious about your miracles. If, then, you will not leave off working them, we protest and declare on high, in virtue of the obedience we have promised you, that we will no more with your tomb and those there into no more." As might be expected, the threat was sufficient, and Saint Etienne de Muret did no more miracles.—All the Year Round.

A Useful Patrol Wagon.

A useful patrol wagon has been devised for electric railwaymen. It is constructed very much like a police wagon, but has a spare wheel fitting out of it which is operated by a lever. The lever is raised or lowered in accordance of a crank and pulley, and when elevated to its full extent it is fifteen feet high. The consequence is that the linemen can drive under the wire to be repaired and be immediately placed by the raising of the lever on a level with his work. The patrol wagon is a great improvement on the old method of repairing, without its risks.—Exchange.

Shakespeare's Autograph Worth Millions.

"The most valuable autograph in the world is that of Shakespeare," said a dealer. "There are only three genuine autographs of Shakespeare in existence, and these are altogether out of the market. Bring me a genuine Shakespeare and I'll undertake to pay you $50,000 for it, $100,000 for it within a year. It might sell at auction for a very large sum, but it would be more to do so as soon as connoisseurs were satisfied as to its genuineness and became properly excited about it."—Collector.

A Liberal Giver.

Seventeen years ago a young man in Chicago found a pocketbook containing several thousand dollars. Now, having made nearly a million dollars since from his find, he advertises for the loser and explains his "willingness to pay for the pocketbook and restore the amount of the contents."—Philadelphia Ledger.

When Taking Down the Stove.

In taking down the stove, if any soot should fall upon the carpet or rug, cover quickly with dry salt before sweeping, and not a mark will be left.—New York Journal.

Accidents Too.

More than four hundred in street cars on Boroughtlers and in omnibuses, even more than when they are under the sense and restraint of private homes. Some men cannot give an order at a restaurant without half a bulletin the waiter and telling every one within shouting distance know what they are about to eat and drink.

Charley Morris, of the New York Stock exchange, is one of the sudden and most sensible wags in the country, and a capital fellow without. Recently he was seated at Delmonico's dress, taken place, reading while he was awaiting his order, when a man at an adjacent table, who had ordered salmon, called out to the retiring waiter:

"Hello, boy! bring me some anchovy sauce!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter, and he turned to leave.

"And boy!" yelled the man who had ordered salmon.

"Yes, sir."

The waiter took another step and was called to another shout:

"And bring me Harvey!"

"Yes, sir."

"And Worcester!"

"All right"—

At this junction Charley Morris walked over to the man and said:

"Beg your pardon, sir, but I see you are advertised for."

"I—am—advertised for!" stammered the man.

"Yes, just read this," and Charley handed to an astonished man a card, which read:

"If you are curious to hob nobs, take seats, dress this evening and dine."

And the man jumped and rushed back.—Author in Exchange.

Discovery of a Polyandric Tribe.

A curious case has been discovered near the town of Bielschitzgen, about fifteen miles from Sarajevo, Bosnia. This is said to be the first instance of the kind in Central Asia.—New York Journal.

Wall Paper.

In selecting wall paper it should be chosen to accordance with good taste, and the most important question to be decided is whether it is intended to be a prominent or is to become a mere background for pictures. In the latter case the colors should be subdued in tone. Where many color schemes are found in a drawing room, paper of subdued white or cream color, with very small spots of gold, will not be amiss.—Decorator and Furnisher.

Drawing Over a Mantelpiece.

A pretty way of arranging drapery over a mantelpiece is to have a rod fixed in the ceiling and the material drawn through it and allowed to hang in ample folds behind the mantelpiece and on both sides. For such purposes we have seen in the course of the same evening, a drawing room, paper of embossed white or cream color, with very small spots of gold, will not be amiss.—Decorator and Furnisher.

What Is Electricity?

If the question is now asked, "What is electricity?" we may reply advantageously, in the words of Dr. Lodge, a lecturer of which we know a little more than nothing and a little less than something. A little more than nothing, for we know that it is of the nature of light and heat, extending the field of them in waves of motion. A little less than something, for of the essence of electricity itself, whether static or dynamic, we are still absolutely in the dark. There has been no want of other theories, but the Franklinian and Faradaic of the age is to reduce all phenomena and forces to the fewest possible principles, and it is not impossible that this will be facilitated by the wave theory of the so called electric.

The problem of gravitation, too, which was so long regarded as a force acting from a distance, is now equally attributed to the agency of a medium. In no instance is demonstrable the exercise of all natural forces, the physical based likely to be lost astray, even although the existence of force presents one of these world problems, the solution of which must forever escape us; are, although, to the final result of the most exact investigation, it should forever be denied to him even to assert decisively, "It is only a force, and the ether is its medium of transmission."—Exchange.
