THE OGDEN FASTER

Gets Help in Provo For His Trip to Denver.

Louis Mallisé, who has lived in a tent in Ogden for many years and who completed a forty days' fast last December, was a visitor in Provo on Monday. He left Ogden a week ago and had traveled as far as Springville, where he arrived Sunday evening. His peculiar dress, a white canvas suit and a white turban, frightened some of the people, and City Marshal Stotts brought him to Provo for examination as to his sanity. He had announced that his intention was to walk to Denver, and as the mountains between here and Price are filled with snow, it was feared he would freeze to death. After a conversation with Judge Dusenberry, it was decided that Mallisé was not a fit subject for the asylum, and he himself scoffed at the idea of being sent there. He was rather impatient at being interfered with, and claimed he had a right to go where he pleased as any American citizen who had broken no law. He did not see why any one should be litigious or ill-disposed to be walked peaceably along and minded his own business. He did not wish the people of Weber county blamed for the hazardous trip he was taking, as he had left without saying a word of his intentions to anyone, but he stated very positively that he could not think of going back to Ogden, as he was impelled to go to Denver where he expected to get work at his trade as a carpenter. He talked intelligently, and said that he had gained his strength after he had started out on his trip, and felt better than he did before his fast, although he had not yet fully recovered his former strength. In addition to his canvas suit he carries an old blanket wrapped around him in Indian style, and this forms his covering in the night. He sleeps on the ground under the open sky, as he says he does not believe in sleeping in stacks as the tramps do. He runs back to Springville with Marshal Stotts, and sufficient money was raised to pay his fare across the mountains into Emery county, where his walk can be continued with less danger from the cold. For this kindness he appeared to be grateful.

Elder Clark's Funeral.

The funeral services over the remains of Elder Joseph Clark were held Tuesday afternoon in the old tabernacle. There was a large attendance, and appropriate and consoling remarks were made by Elders Davis John, Myron Tanner, Wm. J. Lewis and J. E. Booth, who testified to the integrity of Brother Clark and his faithful services in the Church. He has been one of the residents of Provo from the time when he returned from California with the Mormon battalion in 1849, and took an active part in the Indian wars and all the early events connected with the settlement of the county.

Notes.

John H. Lunsford, aged 28, and Malvina Hansen, aged 21, both of Provo, and George Hinstage, aged 25, and Emma Creer, aged 21, both of Spanish Fork, have received marriage licenses.

The people of Pleasant View ward gave their Bishop, Alexander Gillespie, a surprise Monday evening by visiting his residence en masse. The occasion was in honor of Brother Gillespie's 50th birthday, and a most enjoyable time was had.

TOLD OF PRESIDENT FAURE.

The Head of the French Republic in the Days of the Commune.

M. Faure, the president of the French republic, is well known by a prominent French American resident of New Orleans, who was with M. Faure during the French commune. He describes the new president as a man of personal magnetism, of splendid executive ability and unquestioned bravery and firmness.

Faure began business as a small commission merchant in Rouen, Havre, etc., at Havre years ago. From that, by energy, economy and thrift, he prospered, and his business increased until he was one of the most extensive commission merchants in that city. He became also one of the most prominent men of the city politically, and just before the Franco-German war he was made first "adjoint" to the mayor of the city and was a staff officer of the guard, although his duties did not require his presence on the battlefield. He took an active interest, of course, in the war, and it was owing to his efforts that the commissary department of the French military was kept well supplied. He was also a close adviser of the officials of Havre and in every manner demonstrated great executive talent and a born leadership.

It was in 1871, during the French commune, however, that his personal bravery and ability to confront desperate emergencies were tested. While acting as the deputy of "adjoint," or aide-de-camp of the mayor at Havre, a request was made of him from the mayor of Paris for troops and supplies. The city of Paris was in flames from one end to the other, and all was being taken advantage of by the communists to rob and plunder. Faure at once called for volunteers and urged upon them the necessity of responding to the call. He then raised a company of troops to go to Paris and fight for the cause that was dragging everywhere. Faure showed his courage and won the hearts of the firemen and people by going with the volunteers as their leader. With all his energy the city could spare but few troops to Paris, and for three days, without rest or scarcely anything to eat, fought the flames.

Faure did the duties of a fireman, and on one occasion, when one of the men was asleep from fatigue, rather than awaken him took his place and did his work. He was in a dozen perilous positions during that three days' fight with fire, in company of his companions, and never flinched. In every instance he proved himself to be a man of determination and courage. He was first in every danger, and at the most critical time he never lost his self possession and with power, and with his relentless firmness led old prisoner service in trying to save Paris from the embrace of the fire fiend.

The people of Havre never forgot M. Faure's valiant service on that occasion, and afterward, as a Republican, he was elected to the chamber of deputies. He served with several ministries as minister of commerce, and of late years has had more important connection with that branch of the government service. He has prospered in business as well as in political affairs and is said to be one of the most popular as well as one of the ablest statesmen of the French republic.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

TOMMY—For, what is bigamy?

MR. FIGG—It has reference to a man saying he many wives. It was nothing to do, however, with a man's wife being too many for him.—Exchange.

OBITUARY.

In the News of Saturday evening last was published an announcement of the death of Patriarch William Richards, who, as stated, departed this life at the home of his daughter in the Fifteenth ward, this city, Friday, March 8th, at 1 p.m., aged 88 years.

The deceased received the Gospel in the early rise of the Church, in the State of Ohio, and afterwards gathered with the saints in Nauvoo in the year 1841. He endured the suffering and privations during the driving of the saints from Nauvoo and left the latter place in the spring of 1846. He removed here to get his family and was present at the last Independence day celebration held in Salt Lake valley, with President Willard Richards's company, in the autumn of 1847, residing in the old fort square during the long year and afterwards residing in the Seventeenth ward of this city.

Brother Richards was called on a mission to the Sandwich Islands in December, 1852, and labored there for some time, but on account of ill health he returned to California and then resumed his mission, returning to Salt Lake in the spring of 1854. He afterwards moved to Grantsville, Tooele county, and resided there until the general exodus of the Saints south in the year 1867, when he moved with the main body of the saints. He then took up his home in Manassa, Utah county, where he became Bishop of that ward. In 1877 he was ordained a Patriarch under the direction of President Brigham Young. He afterwards moved to Honeyville, Box Elder county, and then to Provo, Arizona, where he resided until October, 1893. His health having failed him, he was persuaded by his friends to come to Salt Lake City, where he resided until his death.

The funeral services were held from the Fifteenth ward meeting house Sunday afternoon last.
