To Cut the Nuptial Knot.

In the Third District Court, Eleanor Tufts has planted a suit for divorce against her husband, Eldridge Tufts, formerly a saloon-keeper of Main street. She alleges that the defendant has treated her with gross cruelty, and used violence towards her and made her life wretched. She therefore asks for an absolute decree and for such a share of defendant's property, which she puts at $100,000, as may be just and equitable. The defendant has put in a demurrer to this complaint and the case will come up for hearing shortly.

Amusements.

The Lyceum Company opens its season at the Salt Lake Theatre to-night, with "The Charity Ball," by the authors of "The Wife." Daniel Frohman in the organization and maintenance of his celebrated Lyceum Theatre stock company was entirely convinced by the natural ambition of all Americans to produce the very best players. This it is that was responsible for the admirable performances of the Lyceum Company during their visits here with "The Wife" and "Sweet Lavender" in months past, and will insure certain their cordial reception this week at the Salt Lake Theatre in their new repertoire. It is now two years since they have visited us, but Daniel Frohman's policy of retaining our company intact so far as possible will make their performances seem just as they did at the first bloom of their novelty. The new repertoire will include "The Charity Ball" by the authors of "The Wife," a new play called "The Idler" by C. Haddon Chambers, author of "Captain Swift," "The Wife," and a careful production of Dion Boucicault's sterling old comedy, "Old Heads and Young Hearts," with the correct costumes of the period. These plays will be given here in the order named, which is also the order in which they were produced during the past two years at the Lyceum Theatre, New York.

MORE COUNTIES COUNTED.

The Canvassing Committee Makes Good Progress.

NOTHING SPECIAL DEVELOPED.

The Figures are About as Heretofore Announced Unofficially.

The canvassing committee who are engaged in tabulating the returns of the election are making excellent progress. Yesterday they completed Piute County, and this morning began with Iron County. We give the results of today's work up to a late an hour as would allow time to put the tables in type.

Emery county appears to have cast a pretty full vote. This is a rapidly growing county, and its citizens take considerable interest in the election.

In Grand county it appears that the precincts have not yet been given a name, but are designated by numbers. This is a new county, having only been organized at the last session of the legislature, and contains only a few hundred inhabitants.

Garfield is one of the sparsely settled counties. It polled a full vote.

The vote in Iron county was rather light, and only one precinct office, a constable in Kanarra, was elected.

Juab county cast a heavy vote. The contest for the office of school superintendent was close, and there were eight candidates for selectmen, six of whom received a respectable number of votes.

Kane county cast a light vote and had a remarkable number of candidates for the office of selectman.

Millard county cast a tolerably full vote, and had seven candidates for selectmen.

Morgan county did not cast a heavy vote. A corner was elected.

The voters of Piute county turned out pretty well. Here there seems to have been an unusual number of aspirants for office.

No precinct offices were voted for in Rich county.

San Juan county was partly canvassed, but as there were some precincts from which returns had not been received, it was thought best to hold this county in the hope that the returns might all come in before the canvass is completed.

Salt Lake county was in hand when we went to press.

EMERY COUNTY.
