TURKISH TOLERANCE.

Questions Brought to the Notice of the State Department.

QUEER IDEAS ABOUT THE JEWS.

Rights of Armenians Who Have Become Naturalized Citizens of the United States.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 19.—In the foreign correspondence of the state department for the last year, it appears that Secretary Gresham, in answer to United States Minister Terrell, at Constantinople, upon the subject of a request of the British embassador to secure the co-operation of the United States minister to obtain greater freedom of worship for the Protestants in Turkey, [illegible] the treaty of Berlin, [illegible] United States [illegible] the Ottoman [illegible] American citizens as teachers and [illegible]

Another question raised by the [illegible] the Turkish government that property purchased by foreigners should not be used for school houses or churches, and the restrictions on [illegible]

The correspondence closed with a letter from Minister Terrell to Mr. [illegible], a missionary, in which he [illegible] Armenian chapels and [illegible] President sent to Congress [illegible] alleged cruelties committed [illegible] Armenians in Turkey. [illegible] Jews with United States passports [illegible] allowed to remain in Jerusalem more than ninety days, [illegible] Terrell the following [illegible]

Mr. Terrell says this feature of the [illegible] was unexpected. [illegible] United States [illegible] American Jews when they are subjected to unwarranted interference.

The rights of Armenians who have become naturalized citizens of the United States to return to Turkey caused a lengthy correspondence. The new department took the ground that no United States would protect such naturalized citizens, but [illegible] When a naturalized citizen went [illegible] native country and resided there [illegible] remaining, the United States would not assume to [illegible] him as a citizen of the United States.

American Society in London.

LONDON, April 20.—Tonight the [illegible] dinner of the American Society in London was held at the [illegible] Hotel, presided over by the Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, the American embassador. One hundred and fifty of the most prominent Americans in England were present, in addition to some members of the American [illegible] in Paris, who came to London especially to attend the banquet.

Mr. Bayard had at his right hand the Hon. J. B. Eustis, American embassador to France, and at his left Andrew Carnegie. The guests included the entire staff of the American embassy. Mr. Bayard toasted the Queen and then the President of the United States. Both toasts were received with [illegible] In the course of his speech Mr. Bayard [illegible] the objects of the society, and [illegible] he trusted it would always [illegible] American traditions. The banquet was being marked by the greatest cordiality.

LONDON, April 20.—The Standard, [illegible] applauds the [illegible] of an American society in London, and [illegible] the very different treatment of Englishmen in America to that of Americans in England.

LONDON, April 20.—The newspapers of this city [illegible] the Armenian story of the [illegible] revolution, but they [illegible] The [illegible] to the reported preparations for an uprising in Armenia, says [illegible] "It is [illegible] what [illegible] people [illegible] that there are two sides to the Armenian question. It may well be [illegible] whether the Armenian [illegible] as [illegible] and [illegible] as [illegible] painted. It will be well for Europe to suspend judgment on the [illegible] until the [illegible] reports."

A CASE OF UNDERVALUATION.

[illegible] Revenue to the Government.

NEW YORK, April 19.—The discovery of a great case of undervaluation at the custom house has caused the [illegible] of the port, Jas. Kilbreth, [illegible] The amount of the [illegible] is said to be $100,000. O. L. Sypher, an importer of antique furniture, has been importing goods at a greatly undervalued rate. The matter was brought to the attention of the [illegible] through a discharged employe of the firm, named L. H. [illegible]

For years he was head salesman of the firm known as O. L. Sypher & Co. The firm, he declared, were continually importing [illegible] and in fact, all kinds of silver, as old silver, and paying the duty on old silver, which is [illegible] The goods are [illegible] before the [illegible]

The case has been under investigation by Deputy [illegible], who said [illegible]: "Three years ago when Sypher & Co. suspected special agents thought they had been engaged in illegal practices, but they carried away and [illegible] all their documents to a cellar in Mount Vernon. The customs authorities investigated the matter, but it was never completed, and the officials were very much annoyed."

Colonel [illegible] efforts have been made to stop the investigation. The official on whom suspicion is cast is said to be Eugene [illegible]. He is said to have been in collusion with the firm. He has been in the department fifteen years.

SUGAR FROM HONOLULU.

Shipped Direct to New York Around Cape Horn.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 19.—Consul-General Mills at Honolulu, in a communication to the state department, says:

Sugar is now being shipped direct to New York from Honolulu. New arrangements have been made by the Western Sugar Refining company for this purpose. It is estimated the new deal will divert at least [illegible] tons of sugar from the port of San Francisco to New York during the present year. This is the cause of considerable loss to the lumber and [illegible] vessels, which come to Honolulu from the Pacific coast, and [illegible] generally secured a cargo of sugar for San Francisco.

Many vessels left here this year in ballast, and others had to wait a considerable length of time for a load. Railroads will also lose considerable in freights, as most of the sugar now being carried around Cape Horn was conveyed across the continent of America by rail.

The first vessel leaving Honolulu for New York carrying sugar for the Western company was the Kenilworth, and she cleared on the 11th of March and had aboard [illegible] tons, invoiced at [illegible]. The Commer [illegible] on 25th of March, carrying 2,533 tons invoiced at $[illegible], and the T. F. Oakes is in the harbor preparing to receive a cargo.

FROM JOHN WILKES BOOTH.

Alleged Letter from the Slayer of President Lincoln.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 19.—A special to the Courier-Journal from Paducah, Ky., says: [illegible] Dugger, a prominent merchant of [illegible], yesterday imparted a startling bit of information, if his statements are true. He said that last week he received a long letter from John Wilkes Booth, who is alive in South America, engaged in the mining business. Dugger alleges that Mr. Booth expresses a desire to return to the United States. Regarding the killing of the man supposed to have been Booth, Dugger says Booth states he was an accomplice, being the one that handed Booth the pistol with which he shot Lincoln. Dugger is deemed very [illegible] by those who know him, and he says he will give the letter for publication in a short time.

Ex-Gov. Waite Heard From.

DENVER, Colo., April 19.—At a meeting of prominent Populists [illegible] a reorganization tonight, ex-Gov. Waite made the principal speech, advocating that all Populists stick to their own party and leave the new [illegible] party strictly alone.

China Refuses Certain Conditions.

LONDON, April 20.—A dispatch to the Times from Paris says it is understood that China has refused to consent to Japan's terms in regard to opening certain ports to foreign trade.

The dispatch adds that Li Hung Chang is still in a state of high fever from the effects of the wound.

The Chicora's Fate.

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., April 19.—The mystery of the steamer Chicora, which has been missing since January 21st, with [illegible] men on board, has probably been cleared away. William Hare, who lives on the lake near Saugatuck, came to today and reports that during the evening of January 21st he was on his way home from Saugatuck, and about half way between Saugatuck and South Haven he looked at [illegible] and saw a boat headed for the shore. It was the Chicora. He was sure. Her forward part was well out of the water. Her stern was down and looked to be sinking. There were no signs and he saw no signs of fire nor heard any distress signals. Afterwards he went back, and the boat was then lying on the bottom with her bow up and the ice was pounding her heavily. He paid no more attention to the wreck, as he thought her loss would be known to her owners and everybody else. When he found that the Chicora was gone and that nobody knew where she had been lost, he was afraid to tell what he saw in fear of public [illegible]. The place where Hare claims to have seen the boat is in the same locality where others claim to have seen a large vessel during the search for the Chicora.

PASSED TO THE OTHER SIDE.

George W. Baker, a Well Known Lawyer and Politician.

WILLCOX, Ariz., April 20.—George W. Baker, well known on the coast and in the East, died here yesterday of pneumonia. Baker was born at Lancaster, Pa., and was graduated from Harvard. He was admitted to the practice of law in Philadelphia. He married Miss Mary Lane, the sister of Miss Harriet Lane, the celebrated mistress of the White House during Buchanan's administration. Baker edited the first Democratic morning campaign paper established in Philadelphia. Early in life he moved to California with the forty-niners, and was city recorder of San Francisco for four years during the early fifties, and also practiced at the bar later. He was an associate of David Broderick, [illegible] and Terry. He came to Arizona to look after the affairs of the [illegible] mine for Eastern stockholders, and remained here, being engaged in mining, law and local politics.

TESTIMONY OF THE HAIR.

A Curious Circumstance in the Emanuel Church Tragedy.

The Friends of the Prisoner Still Hopeful of Establishing His Innocence.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20.—W. H. Theodore Durrant, medical student and assistant Sunday school superintendent, is to stand trial for the murder of Miss Minnie Williams in Emanuel Baptist church library on Friday night, April 12, as the coroner's jury has found that the young woman came to her death at his hands; that he outraged her, choked her to death by thrusting pieces of her underskirt down her throat, cut her wrists so that she would bleed to death, and to complete the [illegible] work had driven a knife to her heart and in [illegible] she had [illegible] her breasts. The [illegible] and slashing were done after the girl was dead. There was only a slight flush to be seen on the prisoner's cheek when he heard the verdict that would place his life in jeopardy, but his cool, grey eye gave no sign of emotion. And lightly he went back to his cell, lightly laughed and joked with his jailers, and went to sleep last night as though he had no care in the world. Durrant is either a criminal of remarkable nerve and coolness, or else he is an innocent man. And people wonder how this young man could have done all the gruesome details of the killing of the little woman, who was his friend, without evincing the slightest emotion or concern.

Durrant's friends have based their belief in his innocence on one point especially—that no blood was found on his clothing. But it seems as a matter to the physician's judgment, and his science in the use to secure the exact [illegible] of the [illegible] that [illegible] cleaned up. It has all along been asserted that the murderer could not possibly have inflicted the terrible wounds on the body of the girl, who was, presumably, struggling for her life, without getting a considerable quantity of blood on his clothes.

Acting on this theory the detectives began a search for the [illegible] clothing without success.

With the result of the autopsy and the conclusions of the physicians the matter is easy of explanation. With Durrant's [illegible] required in the [illegible] of the medical knowledge it would have been an easy matter for him to have inflicted wounds on the body and [illegible] blood would have been slow, without soiling his clothes with as much as a single drop of the crimson fluid. It would have been an easy task even for an unskilled man, and it is now [illegible] more probable than that the murderer, be he Durrant or another, left the church without a spot about him to show of his bloody work.

The detectives, however, are not even satisfied with this, and last night they were again at work in the church building—searching, searching from cellar to belfry and lobby to altar. They think that [illegible] bloody garments of the murderer may be found between the lathing and the weatherboards of the hall. With ax and chisel they will tear up the flooring and rend the wainscoting. Another curious circumstance has come to light. On the body of Miss Williams were found several loose hairs and some human hairs. A microscopical examination was made of them and they were measured, with the following result: The long, silky hair, presumably from Miss Williams' head, was found to be six twenty-thousandths of an inch in thickness; the shorter hair, thought to be that of the murderer, measured [illegible] of an inch, and the loose hair, of which there were half a dozen strands, was found to be [illegible] of an inch also.

Some hair from the mane of horse ridden by Durrant on his trip to Mount Diablo was shown to the expert and when put under the microscope was found to measure exactly the same as the loose hair found on Miss Williams' clothing. The coincidence was made more remarkable when it was found that hair from the manes of several horses measured either more or less than that of the horse Durrant rode.

The stable keeper who owned the horse says that Durrant stabled the animal in the stable on the afternoon of the day that Miss Williams was murdered.

The church in which the murder was committed has long been held in anything but high regard by the neighbors. One of the latter, Richardson, says that it was a common thing to see young men and young women go into the church by the side gate at all hours of the day and night. "These visits had become so common," he said, "that no one paid any attention to it any longer. It was a daily occurrence and the people had ceased commenting on it.

"There was light in the church nearly every night. The pastor's study was lighted up nearly every night. I saw a light in it on Friday night, April 12, at 10:30 o'clock as I passed into the [illegible]. I paid no attention to it, as it was such a common thing, and the neighbors had become accustomed to it."

The chain of circumstantial evidence that has been woven link by link appears so strong that it seems hardly possible that it can be rent asunder. Yet, in spite of this, the prisoner's mother and his friends say they are more hopeful than ever. They say at the proper time neither proof nor shadow of proof that would controvert the facts ascertained.

Brigadier General Dickinson, of the National Guard, of which Durrant is a member, is chief counsel for the accused.

Rev. J. G. Gibson, who has been mentioned often in connection with the tragedy, still keeps himself in seclusion and refuses to see reporters. A prominent Baptist in Oakland has addressed a letter to Gibson advising him that in view of a charge made in a communication that he is implicated in the murder of Miss Williams, he should bring a suit for libel so that the matter may be brought to proof. The pastor has as yet made no reply to this.

Now that the inquest in the matter of the murder of Miss Williams has come to a conclusion, public interest is centering in the inquest that is to be held next Thursday in the case of Blanche Lamont, whose naked body was found in the belfry of the church, with the marks of the strangler's fingers on her neck. This murder is also attributed to Durrant. The police and the coroner are said to be in possession of evidence in both cases that has not been disclosed, only enough being allowed to come out in the testimony at the inquest to hold the suspected [illegible]

Sufferings of Negroes in Mexico.

HOUSTON, Tex., April 20.—Refugees from a colony of negroes in Mexico arriving here detail the terrible suffering to which their race has been subjected in a Mexican colony. They say their food consisted of a very meagre allowance of meal with a handful of coarse meal and beans for a day's provisions. They were forced to work in mud with straw. Women and young girls were exposed to insult by guards and others who hung about the colony. Recently, three women, [illegible] with babes in their arms, were [illegible] from [illegible] by a train crew to Mexico and brought to Eagle Pass. They are unable to get away, and if an attempt is made to escape the severest punishment is inflicted, rendering them unable to work.

Mr. Hopper replied politely, "Madame, I'm afraid I'm not acquainted with your son."

"Well, I don't care whether you are or not," she replied, "I want to see him."

"Are you not mistaken in the place?"

"No, it is Hopper's. Hurry up now, I want to see all of them."

"How many have you?" said Mr. Hopper, as he rang the messenger call for the police.

"Well, I reckon there's about 25 here," was the startling answer. "And I'm proud of [illegible]"

Mr. Hopper rang the call bell again, and the old lady's child [illegible] [illegible] the banquet hall, where the veterans of the First New York Cavalry were holding their [illegible] annual dinner. [illegible] they came in a [illegible] as many as [illegible]
