A Story About Evarts.

I heard a funny story about Senator Evarts to-day. It related to an occurrence which happened when he was secretary of state under Hayes, and it was told me by one of Mr. Evarts'. intimate friends. Evarts, you know is one of the best livers in the country. He likes terrapin, and he can tell you to the year the age of old wine or fine brandy. He spends thousands of dollars upon the stomachs of himself and his friends, and nevertheless he seems to have no more flesh than a scarecrow, and his skin hangs in wrinkles over the bones of his anatomy. The scene was the Cooper Institute, New York. The time was that of a great public meeting at which William M. Evarts—he was then secretary—was to be among the speakers. A long, lank Vermonter was present early at the meeting, and he was very anxious to see Mr. Evarts, whom he spoke of as E-varts, pronouncing the E long and drawing it out with a Yankee twang as he did so. He kept asking if E-varts had arrived, and every time a new man came upon the platform he wanted to know if he was E-varts. At last the great secretary of state sauntered up to the rostrum, and the man was notified that there at last was Mr. Evarts. He looked at him for a full moment and then turned round with surprise written all over his countenance:

"And is that E-varts?"

He was told that it was.

"Not William M. E varts?"

"The same."

"Well, I swam," concluded the man with a look of mingled astonishment and disgust. "He looks as though he boarded."

It is said that Secretary Evarts tells this story sometimes upon himself, and that he laughs heartily as he does so.—Cleveland Leader.

Ouida's Study of the Emotions.

It was soon after her own disappointment that Ouida discovered that her companion, a shy, grave little English governess, was also having a love affair with an Italian. The girl had been somewhat imprudent, slipping out at late hours to talk to her lover, for both of them were afraid of the bitter, disappointed woman with whom she lived. When she was discovered through her own imprudence she had given Ouida a hold upon her which she used for her own advantage. "Only on one condition will I countenance this affair," said the severe and angry novelist, "You must tell me everything relating to this affair, every word that has passed between you and every emotion of your heart."

The girl wept and raged. Ouida was inexorable, she had no friends to go to, and her lover was away on a journey. Finally she succombed and told, amid tears and angry protestations, all her pretty, tender little secrets—all the gallant vows of her fiancee—and every feeling of her own poor little heart was bared to relentless questioning. In Ouida's next novel the whole thing appeared as a careful study of the emotions of an innocent, loving girl. The little governess is married and the prosperous, happy mother of beautiful children.—Cor. New York World.

Mexico's Season for Cutting Mahogany.

In Mexico the season for cutting mahogany usually commences about August. Gangs of Indian horses are employed, consisting of two to fifty each, under the direction of a captain. Each gang has also a cazador or "huntsman," whose duty it is to search the trackless forest for suitable trees to be felled, and to guide the wood cutters to the places. The felled trees of a single season are spread over so wide a space that miles of roadway have to be made to reach them, and numerous rude bridges constructed over the rivers that lie in the way. All the larger logs have to be "squared" before they are brought away on rude wheeled trucks along these forest roads. Each truck requires seven pairs of oxen, and the work could be much more expeditiously done by our portable railways and plantation engines. The implements used by the Mexicans in this trade are rude and insufficient, large quantities of timber being often spoiled by their insufficiency, combined with the ignorance of the workmen employed.—Boston Budget.

Dr. Von Gudden a Noted Authority.

Dr. Von Gudden, who lost his life in the attempt to prevent the suicide of the late king of Bavaria, was a noted authority in the science of mental and nervous diseases. Investigations have been carried on in his laboratory in the minute anatomy of the brain, spinal cord and sense organs, which have proved fruitful of results. Among these he established a method of studying the connections of the nervous system, which consists in extirpating a sense organ or other part of an animal when young and then allowing the animal to grow up. At death the animal is minutely examined, and the nerve fibers which have failed to develop indicate the paths of nervous connection between the extirpated sense organ and the brain center. He had been working for many years by this and other methods to determine the mode of connection between the retina and the brain, but the results of his labor have not yet been made public.—Chicago News.

TO RUN AHEAD OF THE TRAINS.—I have always owned fast horses. I remember one which achieved quite a reputation while I had him. I sold him to the Albany Railroad to run ahead of trains. That might seem somewhat novel nowadays, but at that time trains did not run as fast as they do now, neither were there the facilities for telegraphing and flagging and switching trains, to prevent accidents; and that was what my horse was used for. He was started out every day just before the passenger trains leaving time, to flag the train coming the other way, and he always made it. Horses were useful animals in those days. It was a common thing to hitch a team of horses to a car and pull it into New York, after the regular trains had passed. The father of Dan Whitmore, of the Merchants' Exchange, used to do his marketing that way every night. I have had a good deal of fun on those trips, as I was then quite a boy.—E. Goddard, in Globe-Democrat.

FROM THE FOUR WINDS.

When a woman wants to drive a hen she shakes her dress at it. Cloth shoos, as it were.

Baseball is taking the place of bull fighting in Cuba. Thus does civilization advance step by step.

The Boston Herald heads the market specials, "Some Movements in Flannels." We should say so. They are coming off with a rush.

Flipkins was passing along the street and saw a trunk outside the door of a dealer bearing this legend: "This size for $10." So do I," said Flipkins.

"I clum in the window," exclaimed a Madison Avenue boy to his mother. "Clum?" gently inquired the lady by way of correction, "well, clum, then" amended the boy.

"These are hard times," said a young collector of bills. "Every place I went to I was requested to call again but one, and that was when I dropped in to see my girl."

"Young men believe in nothing nowadays," sighs Mrs. Grundy-cham, with a deep sigh. "Why, there's my nephew Tom, who was brought up as a Christian, and now he's an Acrostic."

The Anti-Wagnerites who contend that the music of Wagner was responsible for the insanity of Ludwig are crazier than the Bavarian king was. They are fools either in judgment or in preludice.

It is said that new gems should be passed two or three times through a gem lapidary before being set in order to expect the ink to flow freely, and after this preparation they ought to write very articles.

A crowded horse car. Enter Mrs. Mulcahey with a jug. Mr. Mahoney, who is seated facetiously: "Wud I ketch a wh-whisky for you, Mrs. Mulcahey?" Mrs. M., with withering sarcasm: "Thank you kindly, sir, but yer hands are too much for me, I'm thinkin' ye'd spill some."

A Western paper publishes an article on "How to Act in a Cyclone." Any advice on this point would seem to be superfluous. According to all accounts that we have read, when a man is in a cyclone there is not much chance for him to act; the cyclone does all the acting.

John Robinson, from the Isle of Man, recently swam across the Hudson River, from Nyack to Tarrytown, a distance of three and a half miles, in one hour and thirty-six minutes. The race was against time, the bet being Robinson could not swim the distance in an hour and forty-five minutes.

It was worth while to invite the historian Ranke to dinner. Once when lunching with the King of the Belgians he made himself so agreeable at the table that the party remained seated listening to his talk and forgot all about their dinner. Such a man would be a blessing in disguise at a boarding house.

Mrs. X. of Germantown, Md., went into a shoe store the other day to make a purchase. After much discussion about the price, the dealer, by way of argument, told her that the late roller skating craze had made shoes go up. "Well," she replied, pocketing the money, "it must have made bonnets come down." And she wended her way towards a milliner's.—Detroit Free Press.

A peddler who had a load of Connecticut clocks was selling them from house to house in Kentucky last month, and as he only asked $2 down, and was willing to give the buyer fifty years in which to pay the other $3, an Eastern drummer asked him how it was that he could give such long time. "Oh, that's all right," was the reply, "the profit on the first payment is $1.50, and the 50 years' time is gittin' a guy to make 'em believe that they have beaten me out of $3."—Wall Street News.

A lawyer who went out from Buffalo to attempt to collect something from a busted grocer who was owing a New York house, found the break a bad one, the grocer explaining: "I owe $6,000 and have only $200 assets. All is lost except honor." "Say," replied the attorney, as he suddenly grew confidential, "I want to make at least $20 out of this trip, and if you'll give me ten, I'll tell you how to lose your honor also, and make a complete thing out of it!" The grocer probably employed him, as the $200 assets disappeared that day.

The San Francisco Chronicle, speaking of the new university which Senator Stanford proposes to establish in California, says: "People were getting just a little impatient at the seven months' delay which has occurred since the deed of trust was executed." There is a colossal cheek about this that is characteristic of the great Pacific coast. A generous benefactor proposes to make a gift to the public worth millions of dollars, and that public kindly gets impatient because he does not move fast enough to please them.

A man afflicted with deafness took a prescription to a Topeka druggist, who filled it with care and in the latest style. The deaf man asked the price, when the following talk occurred: Druggist (leaning on counter and smiling in a want-you-go-up-sort of manner): "The price is seventy-five cents." Deaf customer: "Five cents? Here it is." Druggist (in a louder voice): "Seventy-five cents, please?" Deaf customer: "Well, there's your five cents." Druggist (in a very loud voice and very firm manner): "I said seventy-five cents." Deaf customer (getting angry): "Well, what more do you want? I just gave your five cents." Druggist (sotto voce): "Well, go to thunder with your medicine; I made three cents, any way."
