The Casper, Wyo., Derrick says there is a pressing need for more dwellings in that town. Rents are high and the people are living in tents.

News has been brought to Austin, Nevada, that Thomas Graves, his wife and three children were killed by a snowslide while living in Mill canyon, Stonley valley.

A petition is in circulation at Flagstaff, Arizona, asking the legislature to pass a more stringent law in reference to requiring railroad companies to pay for stock killed by such corporations.

Joe Dillinger, one of the horse-growers of Powder river, Wyo., says the Sundance Gazette, was in town this week. He brought in town and disposed of the hides of fourteen grey wolves and twenty-three coyotes.

The accountants examining the books of Leandro Cornejo, Federal chief disbursing officer of Oaxaca, Mexico, who disappeared two weeks ago, have discovered a defalcation which, it is believed, will reach $50,000.

Four of the six railroad bridges crossing the Hart river, six within six miles of Mandan, North Dakota, are washed out. For scores of miles the track is gone. In the Hannah's and Smith Side additions the water has flooded the houses. All the people were removed in safety.

Saratoga, Wyo., Spec. The surveying for the two dams to be constructed across the Platte river, in place of those which went out during high water last year, is being done. The old Hogan, Muldoon & Beall ditch will be doubled in size and the irrigation company ditch bridged wherever necessary.

The Omaha Bee's Lincoln special says: The committee appointed by the legislature to investigate the state of affairs and association if the evidence was enough to impeach the board of public lands and buildings, have reported to the house unanimously in favor of the impeachment of Secretary of State Allen, Attorney General Hastings and Commissioner of Public lands and buildings Humphrey. Impeachment proceedings will now be pushed.

A special dispatch from Cheyenne, Wyoming says: "Elton, Joel J. Hunt of Casper and J. B. Okie of Lost Cabin, two of the state's leading livestockers, are down from the north on business. Hunt was a few years ago a poor man, but is rated now $200,000 to $500,000. Okie started about three years ago on $2,000 and it is said he has been offered $150,000 in cash for his cattle. These men say there is nothing in the alarm that there is danger of overstocking the range business in Wyoming."

Charles Hecht of Cheyenne, Wyo., has traded Wyoming ranches and Omaha real estate for 1,280 acres of farm land near Palmer Lake, Colo. The owners of the latter were Freeborn Ferguson of w Denver savings bank and others. The deeds for the deal are given at $2,000. Citizens of Sundance are prepared to make concessions for a railway to the shops at a bonus of $10,000 and the people are liberal. A fund of $1,500 cash, a site and 500 bushels of wheat has also been raised for the promotion of a flouring mill.

Andrew Reynolds, a 14-year-old son of A. J. Reynolds, cashier of the Virginia mine at Ouray, Colo., met with a very serious, if not fatal, accident on Sunday afternoon while climbing on the mountain west of town. He slipped and fell over a cliff about 40 feet high, lighting in a snow bank, and then rolled down about 250 feet. He was seen falling and when found was unconscious, but not badly hurt. His skull was badly fractured and his head cut in several places. Had it not been for the deep snow he would have been instantly killed.

A smooth young man who said that his name was John Jacob Astor, worked the no change racket on A. Tipps, a grocer on Fifteenth avenue, Denver, on Saturday. Astor ordered $3.50 worth of groceries to be delivered at 1700 Pennsylvania avenue and when the clerk drove to that number Astor met him in front of the house and asked him for change for a $20 bill. The clerk gave him $17.50 and Astor went into the house apparently to get the bill but he failed to appear. The people in the house knew nothing of him. Astor, whose right name is McGuire, was arrested by Officer Kimmel.

Two colored men struck Lusaria, Wyo., on Saturday, and were promptly arrested as deadbeats. These men had put in their time learning the name of the local colored preacher and some of the members of the congregation. Armed with this information and a deceptive petition they started out pretending that they were raising money with which to build an African church in the city. They forged the signatures of a number of gentlemen, and set various sums opposite the signatures of those whose names they had forged. They selected the names of some of the Democratic candidates. Whether they were hired by other parties is not known.

The body of J. B. Hood of Rock Creek was found near the Anthony, Topeka & Santa Fe depot at Ross, N. M., about 5 o'clock on Saturday morning, cold as ice. Hood was seen at Rock Creek Tuesday last and appeared considerably drunk and quarrelsome. He went to the depot and stated and entered his baggage. Henry Jaquins, who watch for left the depot, it is supposed he was waiting up and down the street to drive off the effects of drunk while assaulting the 11:40 night train, when he met Jaquins in a fit of anger. There are no marks of violence on the body, and a silver watch, gold chain and $40 in currency was found in his pocket, also a bottle of strychnine, in which the sealing was not unbroken. Hood was about 40 years old and a miner.

The grand jury of San Francisco has taken upon its shoulders a task of no small magnitude, and if it is the sincere desire of the jurors that the proceedings be conducted in such a satisfactory manner should attend the party's efforts towards the wholesale purgation of the school board. The fact has been established that for some time past attempts have been made to secure certain positions in the school department, and in all probability these unusual practices were not always private. Just how the business was done is a matter that the grand jury should give considerably to know at the present time. An investigation has been under way for several days, and the grand jury is now in possession of information which, if closely followed up, should result in bringing to the bar of justice the hand of tribe brokers who have long fattened on spoils exacted from applicants for appointment as teachers.

The Arizona Prospector says: Col. Noyes, commander at Fort Huachuca, has been making it very uncomfortable of late for civilians who visit the post. He heard of some time ago the requiring civilians visiting the reservation to register at the guard house before transacting any business. He ordered the removal of the pistollies from the reservation and a squad of soldiers had partially executed the order when stopped by a deputy marshal and constable, who requested a cessation of hostilities and gave Col. Noyes to understand they would produce the pistollies. Orders were subsequently received by the post authorities, Mr. Clark, from the fourth assistant postmaster-general, directing the removal of the pistollies, at her leisure to a point four miles north of the post just off the reservation. The residents and citizens who got their mail at Huachuca have entered a strong protest against Colonel Noyes' action.

Jesse Wooten, of Beaver valley, Sheridan county, shot and killed his wife and himself at Chadron, Nebraska, on Sunday afternoon, in front of the clothing establishment of M. L. Smith & Co. Death resulted instantaneously in both cases. Wooten was married about six years ago and shortly afterwards became so addicted with the habit that he was unable to work. He became slightly in his wife and on several occasions during the day said was working to make a living for herself and her two children, but had not been seen regularly. W. had threatened several times that would kill his wife, he would take some one else with him, but he outside the saloon he said he meant it. On Sunday he met his wife and asked her to return home with him, but she refused. Without warning, he pulled a revolver and shot her in the neck, cutting the aorta and causing instant death. Hogg, an officer, hearing the cry, rushed up, but before he could reach the Wooten he turned the revolver and shot himself in the temple, the ball leaving the same exit as that of his wife.

It is stated that the murderers of young Todhunter, who was murdered by counterfeiters in Santa Cruz a few days ago, have been identified. Two Mexicans named Salas and Gomez, who are suspected of being the murderers, have been recently been arrested in that city. Since then one they were seen, escaped to Marysville while about to commit a robbery. When captured a complete kit of burglars' tools was found in their possession. They were sentenced to carrying them, and Wilson was sent to jail for six months, while for some offense was given her sixty days in the chaingang. Wilson and Salas occupied the same cell, and after being in jail about three weeks they escaped by cutting a hole through the wall which surrounded the jail. Two men answering the description of the murderers of young Todhunter were spotted from the steamer at Knight's landing weeks ago, and according to the report of the steamer they answer the description of the burglars, except that they both wore beards. Should Wyatt, if he was in Santa Cruz, be found, and a strong effort is being made to locate them. It is now learned that a boat belonging to a resident up the river was stolen on the night of the murder. Whether or not the boat was used by the slayers is a matter of conjecture, but many are of the opinion that the murderers were drowned while attempting to cross the levee. Several residents of Washington claim that a certain man whose name is not known to them, in conversation with the murder against the counterfeiters to escape. It is stated that he furnished the men with a boat and warned them of an approach of a posse. Sheriff Wyatt is in town, having the boat with him, and he says he intends to arrest the individual for abetting murderers to escape.

A REMOTE CORNER.

Interesting News from a Contented Colony on the Rio Virgen.

Special Correspondence of the News.

LITTLE FIELD, Arizona, March 16th, 1893.—Little Field is located in the north-west corner of Arizona, on the Virgen river. About one hour's walk will take a man over the line into Utah or Nevada either. The Bear's dome, rather known, are just one mile from Little Field. That place was settled about thirty years ago, and presided over by Bishop Henry Miller, but because of big floods the people left there.

The people of Little Field work the most rich cotton land. They have built them a schoolhouse, and have a good school well organized. The people find an appropriate name, but said winter the people endeared their fields by enclosing about 100 acres made by nature. The land was primarily made up with a material good crop that will usually grow up in the latter part of May. Two months, or one of small grain and a crop of corn, can mature on the same piece of land the same season, and benefit is not five times every summer. Cotton is cultivated here and there and Peaches, grapes and a large variety of fruit do splendidly well. The land bottoms on the river and the wide tributaries on both sides give land for a large number of stock without any winter.

The Little Field district numbers six or seven families, presided over by Elder A. Trubner, who belonging to the Bunkerville ward. Bunkerville is about five miles down from the river. The people of that town grow tobacco on account of the extreme place to be unfortunating in wound everything. Of grain they raise sufficient for home use and some to sell, and of hay, fruit and other stock. Their cotton they exchange at the Washington factory for clothing. Many hundreds of acres lie along the river uncleared—good land and plenty of water for it.

Another exemplary deed of the Bunkerville people is worth noticing, their kind way with the Indians. The settlers say they could not hold on their work without the Indians, and the Indians just think they could not live without helping to work at Bunkerville. As a result the Indians generally dress as well and ride as fast as the whites. The well-to-do people of Bunkerville have no lonely among them, and so they invite the old and feeble among the Indians to come and get their monthly fare-offerings, and they gladly respond. The people there built them a very creditable thing office last winter, and nearly completed a new grist mill, also a cotton ball for ginning cotton. Besides this they enclosed their large field with a good wire fence. New settlers move in there gladly without being called, indeed Bunkerville bids fair to become quite a city. At present it is inhabited by about forty families.

Krupps' Care for Its Workmen.

Last year twenty-five thousand men were employed at the Krupps' foundries at Essen, Germany, and these with their families amounted to 67,891 persons. The corporation builds all the workmen's houses, provides co-operative stores and strives to prevent drunkenness and disease. Private common schools have been established, in which free instruction is given. By special arrangement the advanced schools in Essen and Altenessen are free to apprentices of the works, and these facilities are made use of by over six hundred pupils belonging to families connected with the Krupps' works. There are two classes of industrial schools, one for children and the other for women and girls over fourteen years of age. In these sewing, tailoring and cooking are taught. Evangelical and Catholic sisters have charge of the girls' schools, and the firm is at great pains to make no sacrifice in behalf of the improvement of its employes.
