HURT WHILE HAULING ROCK.

John Taylor, of the Eleventh Ward, Meets With a Bad Accident.

Castleton Bros., at the corner of Second and L streets, in the Twenty-first ward, are about to erect a new store on the site of their old building, which was demolished a week or so ago, and workmen have since been engaged excavating there prior to the construction of a cellar and the laying of a solid rock foundation. Yesterday afternoon, shortly before 4 o'clock, John Taylor, who resides in the Eleventh ward, was hauling rock for this latter purpose, and was in the act of backing his team into the hollow when the earth suddenly gave way and the entire outfit went over, landing in a confused heap. Taylor, who was sitting on the shafts of the wagon when the mishap occurred, was pitched among the debris. Several of the fingers of his left hand were badly mashed; he also received a severe injury to the chest, and was otherwise bruised and shaken up. Mr. Castleton and others quickly went to his assistance, took him into the house, and bestowed upon him all necessary care. When he had somewhat recovered he was conveyed to his home and a doctor fetched. It is thought that his injuries are not so serious as was at first feared. Taylor, who is about 45 years of age, has been a singularly unfortunate individual. Within the past twelve months his wife died, and he has also lost one or two children from diphtheria. He is said to be a steady, hard working man.

OPENING THE BIDS

For the Supply of Text Books for the City Schools.

At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the school work committee of the Board of Education held a meeting and opened the bids that had been filed for the supply of text books for the city schools for the next five years. The twenty-two bidders were as follow—the bids opened according to the order in which they here appear:

Silver, Burdett & Co.
Columbian Book Company.
Effingham, Maynard & Co.
American Book Company.
A. Lovell & Co.
George Q. Cannon Sons Company.
John C. Fuller & Co.
D. C. Heath & Co.
Ginn & Co.
S. C. Gregg & Co.
D. R. Augsburg.
J. N. Patrick.
Sheldon & Co.
Bonderbush Publishing Company.
Leach, Shewell & Sanborn.
Biglow, Main & Co.
Porter & Coates.
E. H. Butler & Co.
Cowles & Snodgrove.
Williams Publishing Company.
Charles Scribner Sons.
Henry Holt & Co.

Today the committee met at 2:30 and began the hearings of the agents [illegible] their books and bids, giving ten minutes to each series of text books, besides the time taken in the answering of questions.

The Terrors of Paresis.

[From an Interview in St. Louis.

"Paresis is the most stubborn and stealthy malady that our high-pressure civilization has evolved, and it is about the only one with which advanced medical skill is unable to successfully cope," said Dr. Bernard Graves, of Philadelphia, at the Lindell. "It is so insidious in its terrible ravages and manifests itself in such a variety of forms that the most watchful and learned doctor is liable to be misled by it. For instance, you can doubtless recall the queer and eccentric actions of some friend, recently dead, that preceded his demise many months or a year. His strange conduct never occurred to your mind, perhaps, until his death and you began to commemorate and recount his virtues. It was an unusual irritability here, an ungovernable excitability there, a sudden and inexplicable outburst of passion on another occasion of which you did not consider him capable. All of these things, I say, are brought up to you after his demise, and you marvel at them. Well, they were all simply manifestations of the terrible disease that was fastening itself upon him—paresis. Overwork, too much burden on his vital energy, the constant and tremendous strain on his nervous system, and, oftener than all, continued excitement from dissipation of drink and late-hour hilarity, were developing and feeding the monster that was seizing his brain to sap the vitality from that organ. It might have been that the death certificate read 'heart failure,' or, maybe, some other disease with which the medical fraternity is acquainted immediately preceded his death, but we doctors are beginning to realize that paresis was the superinducing cause. We are powerless to check it with drugs, and the sooner the profession at large acknowledges this inability and, with one voice, cries for a lessening of the pace of living the better it will be for the men of affairs of the country, for it is they who are most subject to paresis. You never heard of a day laborer or a farmer dying of it."

AN ADIRONDACK FISH STORY.

A Gold Watch Found Inside a Pickerel That Had Been Swallowed.

The scene of the following incident was about forty miles from Gloversville, on a beautiful little lake just across the table land at Pinney lake in Hamilton county. The lake is not large, its widest place being more than a mile wide, while it measures from two to three miles long. The day was all that a fisherman could desire, and every condition was right for good fishing. A party of three was in the boat, namely, L. E. Everest, his friend, Professor Spencer, from Brooklyn, and the writer. They had driven up from [illegible] and were more than delighted with their luck. They had taken nearly fifty pickerel in less than half a day, and the size was good, weighing from 1½ to 4 pounds. The last turn around the "lucky point" was being made before we started for home. Everest, who was trolling one of the lines, said:

"I've got another; he's a good big one from the way he pulls."

Everest let him play at one time nearly 300 feet of line before the fish could be turned. When he had been brought into sight he was not so large as some we had already in the boat, but there was an unusual motion all about him. Soon the line was drawn so tightly it was necessary to let him play again. When brought back it was discovered that a larger pickerel had attempted to swallow the one on the hook, which was now quite exhausted.

The big fellow still followed, snatching for the dead body of his victim, which, however, we were not disposed to give up. Just as Everest was about drawing the fish on his hook into the boat the professor took up the oar, hoping to strike and thus capture the large one. The movement of the oar attracted the attention of the fish, and in a twinkle he made a pass at it. The blade was about seven inches wide, but his jaws grated across the upper and lower edge, leaving a groove in either side with his sharp teeth.

The professor, by carrying the oar forward with the movement of the fish, at the same time raising it from the water, landed the huge fellow into the boat. He weighed 10½ pounds. The fish on the hook only weighed three pounds, but showed signs of battle, being bitten in several places. Upon opening him we found, as is often the case, a fish of smaller size in his stomach. This one showed signs of life, and was opened. We then discovered a pretty little gold chatelaine watch, and were surprised that the time agreed with our watches and that it was running.

More than pleased with our fishing expedition, we returned to the Adirondack hotel, and informed Landlord George A. McCoy of our luck, at the same time showing the watch. In less than two minutes all the guests about the house were in the office, and among the number a pretty young lady from Albany, who said the watch was a token of friendship which she had prized very highly. When on the lake in the early part of the day it had fallen into the water, and she supposed was lost. It is needless to say she was overjoyed at its recovery.—Albany Journal.

Only Man Ever Killed by a Meteor.

To the writer's certain knowledge there is but one case on record where a human being has been killed by an aerolite or fall of meteoric stone. The fatality mentioned occurred in Whitestown township, Crawford county, O., in 1853, and is recorded in the Bucyrus Journal as follows:

As David Misenthaler, the famous stockman, of Whitestown township, was driving his cows to the barn about daylight this morning he was struck by an aerolite and instantly killed. It appears as if the stone had come down from a direction a little west of south, striking the man just under or on the right shoulder, passing obliquely through him from the right shoulder to just above the left hip, burying the greater portion of his body under itself in the soft earth. The stone is about the size of [illegible] water bucket, and appears [illegible] composed of pyrites of iron.—Philadelphia Press.

Millions of Fungi Spores.

All the energies of the fungus plant seem to be directed to the production of spores for propagating its kind. Their number is often almost incalculable. You have doubtless observed that the common puff ball when mature is filled with a fine dust, and this consists entirely of spores corresponding to seeds, which are eventually diffused in the air by the bursting of the puff ball. In a single puff ball more than 10,000,000 of these have been counted, and when these minute bodies are once set afloat in the atmosphere they are distributed abroad over an indefinite space, being so small that it is difficult to conceive of a place from which they could be excluded. Their astonishing fertility and rapidity of growth are among the most remarkable characteristics of this vegetable tribe.—Interview in Washington Star.

An Air Tight Prison.

While some men were squaring the trunk of an oak they had just felled they suddenly started back in astonishment on seeing a hideous toad about the size of a large pullet's egg incrusted in the tree 4 inches in from the bark and 15 feet from the root. Though mangled by the ax the creature still moved, but it appeared old, thin and decrepit. A careful examination revealed no entrance to its prison home.—London Tit-Bits.

How to Serve Strawberries.

Serve strawberries up on their stems if you would have a picturesque dish. The hostess may, if it so please her, hull the berries at the table in a dainty fashion, just as if she were dressing a salad. Champagne poured over the berries brings out the full sweetness of their flavor.

How to Prevent a Yacht from Capsizing.

In steering any craft with sails always sit on the "weather" side of the tiller. If the yacht is in danger of filling by reason of being blown down on her side push the tiller away from you quickly, at the same time slacking off the jib sheet. This will cause her to luff. If the wind is too strong and you are unable to reef, shake off both sails and jib sheets so that they are always on the verge of shaking, but care must be taken that the boat shall not lose any steerage, as in that case a flaw would knock her down without the possibility of preventing it.

How to Select Good Beef.

Press the meat gently with your finger, and if the dent rises quickly you may feel pretty sure the meat will be tender and juicy. The flavor will depend somewhat upon the quantity and quality of the fat. There should be plenty of this nutritious and useful article, and it should be a rich creamy white and not "oily."

How Long Seeds Are Good for Use.

The question of a seed's vitality is interesting at least to the gardener. He accepts all kinds as good for a year and as a rule rejects such as are known to be older. There are, however, many kinds of seeds which are long lived. The seeds of maize and rye have been known to grow when thirty or forty years old; kidney beans when 100 and the raspberry, according to Lindley, after 1,700 years. It is often observed that when from deep excavations earths are first brought to the surface they are soon covered with strange plants, probably from seeds long buried.

How to Kill Mosquitoes.

A baking powder can lid, or the lid of any small round tin box, nailed upside down on the end of a stick is all the machine needed. Each night before going to sleep drop a very little kerosene oil into the lid—just enough to spread over the bottom. Then hold it up on the ceiling over the unfortunate insect. In an instant he will fall in overcome. This cannot be used to kill mosquitoes anywhere but on the ceiling; but, nine times out of ten, if one be disturbed from a position on the side wall it will light on the ceiling. This contrivance does not mar the walls as the use of the hand or a damp cloth will.
