Weekly Report of Groups and Prospects That Show Ore on the Ground.

[illegible]

From this property in the Holland we received prospects belonging to H. Hamilton, of this city. Charles [illegible] and several others have [illegible] to be interested as to the [illegible] of the Holland which is on one of them.

After the Bullion-Beck the next [illegible] in value is the Yellow Jacket in the Holland, owned by W. P. Jennings [illegible] of this city. He was at work on this property at present and the [illegible] of the ledge is very good for the future. The ore found is [illegible] though a Mixter amalgamator [illegible] the ores are thrown on the [illegible] and the gold [illegible] and [illegible] the ore.

[illegible] this property in the C. C. and [illegible] Jennings, Jr., E. P. Ryan [illegible] of San Francisco. He was down [illegible] long time in the mine for W. [illegible] and was working on a fissure [illegible] in the Jennings. The [illegible] is down on the head of Fish Creek, a [illegible] of the Holland. Sacked and [illegible] ore from this ledge will be received on the [illegible].

In the Bright Mine there is only one [illegible] at work, and Mr. Charles [illegible] is the owner. This is about the [illegible] extensively developed mine [illegible] Bullion-Beck [illegible] Mixter Lomponcket from [illegible] further work.

In the Smuggler there are six men at work in their lower tunnel. The brothers [illegible] and W. P. Jennings, Jr., are the owners of this city, feel confident [illegible] they have one of the good mines [illegible] and are doing all to [illegible] it. Well developed [illegible] present. James Young, Jr., has a [illegible] in the Bunker Hill group, owned [illegible] R. Cutler, of this city, for [illegible].

The Gregory group, owned by Wilkinson, is a prominent group of [illegible] adjoining the Mammoth on [illegible] side. It is one of the recent [illegible] of the Mixter Lomponcket [illegible] Mr. J. Mixter also owns the Toledo group, which he has one [illegible] in work, a well-looking vein [illegible] quartz.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Absolutely Pure

is one of the warm prospects of the [illegible].

The Golden Queen, owned by H. W. Ramsdell and G. T. Ryan of this city, is a promising prospect on the south of [illegible]. There men will soon be [illegible] work on the property, which has already a well defined vein of ore in sight.

There is a rate on for the Silver King, and no one is at the property except one watchman.

Smelting has been from six to ten men at the Bullion-Beck. Only one man is kept at the property.

We did not visit the Fish Creek side of the mountain this trip, but expect to the near future to visit that side and the Marysvale districts, and see that this we can say nothing as to what is being done in either place.

HIDE AND SINEW.

It was pay-day at Mercur yesterday.

Charles P. Nelson will go up to Alta on Saturday.

With good reports of his milling enterprises in Nevada, Joe Smith is in town for a while.

A strike has been reported in the North Swansea which promises to develop into a paying proposition.

Placers on Thunder mountain, near Warren, Idaho, are producing quantities of gold in paying amounts.

S. V. Elliott left for Mercur this morning. He has been working at Randsburg, Cal., for about a year.

W. H. V. Richards has been at Mt. Hades for the purpose of bonding the claims in Green Creek district.

Thirty-three thousand shares of Lucky Hill stock has been bought in by the company on delinquent assessment.

The Excelsior mine, an economical free gold milling property near Salmon, Idaho, reports profits of $1,000 to $1,400 per month from the lowest grade chute in the mine.

Two dollars in gold, five per cent lead, five per cent copper and seventy-five per cent silver is the result of an assay of ore from the new find in the Lower Mammoth.

A miner from California is driving a 300-foot tunnel on a ledge on Green Creek near Harpster. He reports a good showing and if it holds out a mill is in prospect for the property.

Parties who are handling the slag from the Pole mill and the Boston and Colorado smelting works at Black Hawk, Colorado, are making good money shipping it to the Denver smelter.

At Hanson of the Mammoth mine, who took an active part in the Hall re-bellion, is now hunting to help the miners at the Dewey. At Hanson put to show the Spaniards his prowess as a fighter.

A large amount of development work is being done by the Lydia company on the Kate of Leadville, and the property is it will soon be in the rank of shippers. The property adjoins the well known Midnight and is being operated by lessees.

Lessees on the Keystone mine, Cripple Creek, are taking considerable ore daily from the abandoned workings on the 40 and 80 foot levels, which was overlooked by previous owners. Prospecting work at 90 feet has failed to prove the continuity of the ore shoot.

The success of the Whitewater Development company, 10 miles from Cripple Creek, in opening up the property with low level tunneling, has brought the Bloom country to prominence more favorably than ever. The Whitewater consists of silver and lead mines in the Ainsworth mining division of West Kootenai, in British Columbia.

The Hyde mine, Nevada, is an old mine that has been made a success through the efforts of Mr. Hyde. They have opened a fine body of ore, from which a carload has been shipped and gave $30 in gold, and 95 ounces in silver per ton. A mill is to process of erection for local treatment of the ore.

Moran creek, Montana, is the objective point of a prospectors' stampede from all parts of the state. The man who started the excitement took $2 worth of gold from five pans of dirt. The whole creek is now staked, supplies are being sent in and some of the new claims are reported as showing pay.

Never-Sweat is the name of a claim in Boulder county, Colorado, worked by employes of the Denver Tramway company. They have a shaft down 125 feet, which they are sinking down to 300 feet. They have a well-defined fissure filled with a good grade of milling ore and a small per cent of smelting.

A big strike is reported in the Bellingerand mine on Engineer mountain, Hinsdale county. The property was idle when the miners took hold of it and worked it. It was but a few days until they encountered the ore. The only streak is about thirty inches wide and carries several hundred dollars in gold and silver.

Late developments on the left fork of the Alpine, Hinsdale county, Colorado, point to confirmation of the theory that a rich bellwether will emerge that notion of the camp. Some high grade portable (telluride of silver and gold) and gray copper is taken from the Dexter Hope, and the Fidelia, Golden Fleece and Gold Dyke show the same interesting conditions. Considerable local interest is shown in this section.

The Pine Gold claim, Boulder county, Colorado, has a fine streak of pay ore six inches wide, which is increasing with depth. The shaft is down 45 feet and will be pushed to 100 feet, at which point drifting will commence and the usual line of development will be determined. The chart shows considerable sulphide ore in the vein. The Wee Point mine, in Dutch district, Gunnison county, is working a fine body of mill ore which is five feet wide and carries a pay streak of high grade ore with it. The pay streak runs as high as $800 in gold per ton and is being sacked for shipment. The concentrates run $65.75 per ton, and $6.40 is saved on the placer. The ore is found in an upraise from the tunnel which is in 200 feet.

GENERAL LONGSTREET IN THE WEST.

Famous Confederate Soldier and His Young Wife May Visit Salt Lake.

General and Mrs. James Longstreet are making a tour of the West and their arrival in Salt Lake is looked for in the near future. The general has a number of strong personal friends here and will be given a warm reception on his arrival. Himself and party are traveling in a private car. The party, says the Denver Post, is made up of the general and his wife, Louis Hardcastle, the general's private secretary, Col. C. C. Sanders, wife and daughter, Mrs. M. E. Sanders, Mrs. J. H. Hunt and Emory Branson, all from Georgia.

General Longstreet is one of the most famous Confederate generals and as such receives much adulation from ex-Confederate veterans. He had just settled himself at the breakfast table this morning, when a visitor was announced who said he was an old soldier in the Confederate ranks and wanted a chance to look at the general. General Longstreet never refuses a request of this kind and he left his coffee and rolls to greet with a hearty handshake the hero-worshiper waiting outside.

The general, though 77 years old, is still an active man, strong and alert. He rides horseback every morning when at home and with the exception of a slight deafness, is well preserved.

His marriage last year to Miss Dortsch, of Georgia, who is fifty years his junior, was at the time the subject for many a newspaper story, but both the general and his wife are very happy in each other's companionship. She is devoted to her care for him and delights in referring important questions to him.

Mrs. Longstreet is a charming little woman. Born and reared in Georgia, she is a typical Southerner with a soft voice and gracious manner. She is averse to being interviewed, though as the result of her marriage she had been a newspaper woman from the time she was fifteen years old. She did editorial work chiefly and always worked with a paper of her own.

She is interested in women and women's work, though the ballot has few attractions for her.

"The women of Georgia would lose all their influence," she said this morning, "were they to go to the polls and vote. Woman's suffrage is very unpopular in our state and a mistake, you know, never goes to be unpopular."

Mrs. Longstreet, though not caring for the political rights of women, has done much temperance work for the women of Georgia and is always at work. The office of state librarian is now open to women in the conservative state and mainly through Mrs. Longstreet's efforts. The statute making this possible, was passed by the last legislature after a hard fight, but by an overwhelming majority, only fifteen votes being cast against it. "And after all that, the governor deliberately appointed a man to the place," added Mrs. Longstreet.

"I think," concluded Mrs. Longstreet, "that no woman starts out in life free from real claims. There is always some reason for it. Either she is obliged to work for a livelihood, or her home life is unhappy and cramped and hampered, that there is no hope for her, one. A woman's choice is always the trouble and I think you never find a woman happily married with home and children, who care for anything more."

Mrs. Longstreet is a pretty little woman, with soft light brown hair and sunny blue eyes. It is easy to see that any cause she might achieve toward helping women to help themselves, would not be gained by political enemy making, but by a gentle, womanly influence, quietly used among the men of her state.

She has not an intoned woman's enthusiastic claim coming to Colorado. It was in Harrisburg the other day and the lady confided that she was working for a certain man to be a state senator in the next legislature, and that she was going to see him in all right. Mrs. Longstreet did not express her opinion of the woman politician, nor of her methods.

The general and his wife with their friends, are much delighted with Colorado. They are going to visit Colorado Springs and Manitou and will be in this vicinity for a week.

AMUSEMENTS.

Pinkey Dee "Lady of Lions" was the star attraction at Lagoon yesterday and the entertaining management of this popular resort found its efforts made to assisting this novelty fully compensated for in the large attendance throughout the day. Miss Charlotte Pinkey gave some very daring exhibitions of wild animal training, showing how completely the king of the forest can be brought under human control. Her lions are monsters and about as formidable looking as any ever seen here, but with apparent absolute confidence she allowed them to take raw meat held in her mouth, placed her head in the very jaws of the beasts, drove them through a flaming hoop of burning, blindfolded, laid down among them, all of which performances caused the large audience to scream. There were considerable acts in addition, one of which deserves special mention, that of the colored musical specialists, who are the world renowned specialists. Miss Pinkey and her lions will remain at Lagoon until and including next Wednesday, giving performances at 3 and 8:15 p. m. daily.

HE HAD ENEMIES.

Death of Chief Mistreatment of the Oregon Brings Out a Story.

The news that Chief Mistreatment Grant of the battleship Oregon had killed himself a few days ago in Guantanamo bay was received with interest by all in San Francisco who are familiar with the jack tars of the American navy. Grant was one of the best known men in the marine service, and in the quarter of a century that he had passed on the sea while the Stars and Stripes had made so many friends and enemies as ever a sailor had.

His greatest claim to fame was as the leading actor in one of the most sensational duels in naval annals, and in which he came as near to death as a man could and survive. He was said to have been a veteran in fighting and his report of his condition is well known by his acquaintances that he was in frequent receipt of reminiscences of his adventures, which he delighted in entertaining friends with in his leisure.

The story of his suicide comes from Cape Haitien, the nearest cable station to where the duel took place, which the Oregon is part, and the meager details state only the bare facts that Grant, not fourth at his own hands. At Walker of this city, who knew him well, said last night: "Grant was a man to study. He was chief master-at-arms on various ships and had been in many wars. As I recall the incident that brought him into such prominence and to the notice of a wider world, it was like that Grant was a disciplinarian as strict as ever trod a deck and was cordially hated by his men. The chief master-at-arms of a war vessel has charge of everything below and his power over the men and officers is absolute.

"Grant would insist on fault-finding and constantly was at against the bringing aboard of strong liquors. Discovering a barrel of whisky in a sailor's kit he would not only destroy it, but would have the owner suffer dearly. When he was on the Hartford about ten years ago things had come from bad to worse and finally a crisis determined men and officers alike to put him out of the way. There was time to origin and this emboldened Grant's ire.

"The hammock hung on the main and as the sentinel left the shift of circle he remained in unconscious and cried for help. The anchor watch rushed to lend and rescued him. He is sullenly were soon convinced, from various sources, that he intended and was tried. Grant was not tried to his accusers and was in severe a martinet as ever after he lived.

"I know Grant well," said Frank Shadrach. "He was a man of a good and who he always let himself I can not imagine. He was well-read, was the about 35 years old, with his senses and personality. He was a master of fellow, about 35 years old, proud of his birth and blood in Brunswick, and of a saving disposition. He never spoke of his Yankee ancestors on the British side and seemed uncertain about himself as much as possible. I am convinced that he had killed himself. It was brought about by a quarrel with his crew, as he had no enemies in the world. Possibly an investigation would show that the man who killed him was pulled by a man who was then the dead man."—San Francisco Chronicle.
