consented, and we stowed her them. We fired a shot at each of them, and as we did so they slipped their collars and left."

"Did you go on the Minnesota?" I asked.

"Yes," was the reply. "We boarded it while we were lying beside it. We were surprised to find no one on it. The ship had been deserted by all save the commissioned officers and a few others. A fuse had been connected with its magazine and it was so strongly felt that it would have been blown up had there been any danger of actual capture by the Merrimac. It was used after for war, as a recruiting ship and stationed at New York. I was ordered to duty upon it, and acted as one of its lieutenants for more than a year."

"You did not remain upon the Monitor?"

"No. The Merrimac did not return, and I left the ship that evening and went back to my berg, the Amanda. I was afterward in command of another monitor on the Mississippi. Its name was the Neosho, and I left her at the close of the war. After the war was over my service was on the old Minnesota. Then Captain Worden was ordered to take the Pensacola to San Francisco, and he asked the Navy Department to make me one of its subordinate officers. This was done, and I remained with him two years. Captain Worden is now living here in Washington. He is now Admiral Worden, and it is strange that both he and I should survive that stormy day and each live to be more than three score and ten."

LADIES' BARN.

The Outcome of One Man's Experience in Raising Cows.

A New York correspondent of Board's Dairyman, Mr. A. Decorsey, believes he has built at last the model cow barn. He sends description and pictures of it to Board's Dairyman, which we reproduce as follows:

The barn is built on level ground, there being no bank near it. The size is 100 feet in length by 38 feet in width, with posts 22 feet long. The cow stalls and horse stable are on the lower floor. The stable has eight windows on each side about 3 feet by 2 feet 6 inches. Upper sash lets down and the lower raises. The cows stand in two rows, in stalls facing the windows, there being a 5 foot feeding alley in front of them and a gutter 18 inches in width (should be 18 inches) and 8 inches deep in the rear. Between the two gutters runs a 9 foot driveway the whole length of the barn, with slide doors to each end, through which every morning the wagon or manure spreader, is driven, and the gutters thoroughly cleansed of both solid and liquid manure, and driven directly on the land and spread.

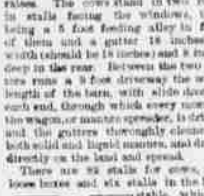
There are 32 stalls for cows, four loose boxes and six stalls in the horse stable, which is separated by tight slide doors from the cows. Over the feeding alleys there are four openings into four ventilators, 8 feet by 2½ feet, which run up the side of the barn into four cupolas built on the ridge of the barn roof. These cupolas are inclined by glass doors, swung on hinges. The north and south doors are connected by a stick, which is about 6 inches longer than the width of the cupola. When the wind blows from the north, that window closes and the south window is forced open the 6 inches. This prevents the storm blowing into the cupola and from the ventilator, but leaves the draft of air constantly flowing up the ventilator. In the ventilating shafts are several doors, one above the other, through which the hay can be put down to the feeding alleys. These ventilators, with the window sashes, afford plenty of fresh air and plenty of light and sunshine for the cows.



COW BARN—GROUND PLAN.

The second story is one year from of 100 feet in length, with the driveway in the middle and a wind upon either side. Without any timbers until you reach the collar beams of the rafters on which the hay carriage is supported. The rafters are supported by long braces nailed on to the foot of the rafters and reaching to the posts about six feet from the peak, to which it is thoroughly spiked. The plan of supporting the roof leaves more room above for hay and grain than any I have ever seen. There is a large door hung in the second floor, near the gable, 12 feet from it is drawn through a door below as wanted.

Albino on Dogs.

Washington dogs are universally quite worthy of imitation, and one of them was paid passionately. This was well illustrated by an incident during the recent holiday. A boy of about 10 years ago, having occasion to go to the market on the morning of the hour at which he should set out for School, he missed his horse just as the old South clock was striking that hour. The whipping of Canaby which was to meet him did not arrive till after the hourlong and she set everyone into the school house. Charles ever before.—Exchange.

FLOOD OF THE NILE.

THE GREATEST EVENT OF ALL THE YEAR AT CAIRO.

Impressive Ceremonies at the Cutting of the Bank to Allow the Water to Flow Into the Canal—The Ancient Nilometer on the Island of Rodah.

The month which usually comes to Egypt is also "winter and bad weather" known nothing of the magnificent spectacle of the Nile flood. The ancient Nilometer of the south end of the island of Rodah, just above Cairo, is one of the most interesting sights of the place. The water enters from the west by a channel, which will admit about 18 feet of water, with a granite and stone pillar in the center. On each side of the pillar is a recess about 6 feet wide and 12 feet deep, surrounded by a massive arch, over which is carved in relief a Kufic inscription, and a similar inscription is carved all around the well, consisting of verses of the Koran. A staircase goes down the well, from the steps of which the initiated may read the height of the water on the pillar, but they are few in number, and the hereditary sheiks of the Nilometer, whose duty it is to look on the record, is a person of some importance. He is now Admiral Worden, and it is strange that both he and I should survive that stormy day and each live to be more than threescore and ten."

OLD NILOMETER.

demns. The tremendous display is what New Yorkers care about more than anything else. For dog and fashion lovers high steppers between 15 and 16 hands high are the favorites. Sometimes they match in color, sometimes their wealthy owner mingles a fancy for having fine of different sorts, say black and white, or bay and gray.

Horse Jerseys.

In one pen were placed four pure bred Poland China pigs that were large for their age, sturdy and hearty, and two pure bred Duroc-Jerseys. One of these had had a hard struggle to live and was only just now getting a good start, and the other was a fat, healthy fellow that nobody would pick out as a grower. The pigs, though, were a little the older, so that they were all very nearly the same weight. A chance to compare the breeds, with the odds in favor of the black pigs. What was the result? The red pigs lost the black ones very decisively in the race. They were not weighed, but at the end of 100 days' feeding the sad pig which had once nearly starved to death was about 30 pounds heavier than "Chubby" and 40 pounds heavier than any of the black ones. The scored vigor and the ability to fatten rapidly. While the red hogs have maintained their reputation for hardiness and docility, they undoubtedly have shown the ability to fatten as readily as any other hog. Are not these the essential points for the money making hog?

One fault, though, has been noticed in the individuals of this breed which have come under my observation. Too large a proportion of them have poor feet. They go down instead of standing on their legs. Whether this is a fault of the breed I cannot say, but I intend to guard against it in my breeding. As for disturbing the enthusiasm of my view of the thoroughbreds, all my pigs were sold last fall readily at good prices.—L. B. Watson in Rural New Yorker.

She Runs a Livery Stable.

Maria Temple, Baldwin, Ia., says she would rather be a chambermaid in a livery stable than a stockinger in church." She has, in fact, been in the livery business for the last two years, and she has been successful too. Baldwin is a little village of the inhabitants on the Anamosa branch of the Northwestern. Times do not run very frequently on this branch, and so there are a number of small towns near by, the trending now who stop there usually drive to their next stopping place. There is but the one stable in Baldwin. Miss Temple has a good thing of it. She acquired a business for herself and the stock of horses that them which she and her sister run a farm.

Don'ts For Hot Weather.

I will tell you what some of the farmers did with sunstroke horses here. They killed them and took the hides off and let the flesh lay in the road. They will not die horses and get fat. There have been 155 horses killed here. This week old sunstroke. That is the way to get rid of them. The hide is worth from $1.25 to $2.75, according to the quality of the hair.—Exchange.

The famous English hackney stallion Danegelt was sold for $21,000. This is the highest price ever paid for a hackney anywhere.
