UTAH WOMEN IN WASHINGTON.

The Midland Monthly for June, in the second paper by Juliette M. Babbitt on "Prairie Bloomers's Wives in Washington," pays considerable attention to Utah women at the national capital. There are portraits of Mrs. Arthur Brown and Mrs. C. E. Allen, with the following account of the wives of the three gentlemen who represent the new State in Congress:

The wife of Senator Arthur Brown, of Utah, our newest State, is a native of Kalamazoo, Michigan. She and her husband, born but a few miles apart, almost grew up together. She was Miss Isabel Cameron, youngest daughter of Mr. Alexander Cameron, of recent prominence, and an early settler of Muskegon. On her mother's side she comes from Revolutionary and Mayflower stock. Along sixteen years ago she went with her husband to Salt Lake, where they have ever since occupied a financial position, their handsome home being quite famous for the number of guests of national prominence who have been entertained in it. Mrs. Brown is of pleasing appearance, dark haired and dark eyed, is a good writer and has excellent taste in dress. While taking a deep interest in politics for her husband's sake, she is not exactly an advocate of woman's suffrage, but when it was incorporated in the state's Constitution, she accepted the situation and the chairmanship of the women's branch of the Republican committee, to form clubs devoted to the training of women in parliamentary law, etc., and gave many weeks of her time to it. She is much more interested, however, in the Orphan's Home and Day Nursery, of which she is a director and one of the founders. This fine charity is worked for by people of the numerous creeds of the city. Senator and Mrs. Brown have one child, Max, a bright boy of much promise, about thirteen years old. Mrs. Olympia Brown, the famous suffrage orator, is a sister of the Senator.

The wife of the other senator from Utah, Frank Cannon, was Miss Martha Brown, of Ogden, her present home. She is tall, slight and fair, with blue eyes and very quiet manners, and is devoted to her husband and children. There are three daughters and one son. All but one are at school at home. Thus far she has taken little part in society.

Mrs. Clarence E. Allen, wife of Utah's only member of Congress, was Miss Corinne Tuckerman, daughter of Prof. Jacob Tuckerman, a prominent educator of Ohio. She was educated at Mt. Holyoke and Smith's College, paying considerable attention to music. She is rather petite and of medium height, has dark hair and eyes, a sweet voice and agreeable manner. She takes a lively interest in woman's work, is president of the Ladies' Literary Club of Salt Lake—one of the oldest clubs in the West—and vice-president of the Federation of Women's Clubs. She keeps house in Washington, but, coming very late in the season, has not taken much part in social matters. She has two sons and four daughters—the eldest, a pretty girl of sixteen, with much musical talent, already playing well upon the violin.

THE CITY SUPERINTENDENT.

The city board of education has re-elected Dr. J. F. Millspaugh city superintendent of schools, and in doing so has performed an act that will meet with general approval. The Dr. has proved himself highly competent for the position, having a record for courtesy and efficiency of which any man might be proud. In response to the economizing spirit of the times, a reduction was made in the salary from $3,000 per year to $2,500. This latter amount is not as large a compensation as the position ought to pay, considering the requirements of the office and the qualifications necessary to fill it satisfactorily, but under existing conditions it is perhaps as fair a figure as could be secured.

THE POLICE SQUABBLE.

Now that the board of police and fire commissioners has set itself right upon one important point by placing the order of the district court and reinstating Sergeant Eslinger, it is in order to consider another phase of the case: that of getting an immediate settlement of the dispute between Chief Pratt and the sergeant. By the court's ruling it is declared in effect that the chief of police cannot suspend a subordinate except under rules made by the commission. Of course this ruling will have to stand until modified by a higher court, which may be done when the case is reviewed, since it is not altogether clear that the law has been interpreted either according to its word or spirit. In the fire and police commission law it is expressly stated that the chiefs of police and fire departments shall have power, "under such rules as the board may establish," to suspend without pay, fine, or dismiss any subordinate officer, and report the action to the board. The court's ruling would be perfectly clear if the law stopped there; but it does not. It contains the further provision that the police and fire department chiefs shall "make and enforce rules and regulations to secure discipline in their departments respectively." The question in the Eslinger case is one affecting the discipline of the police department, and if the chief of police has no power to enforce his rules to secure discipline, then the last quotation from the law is without effect and an absurdity. Just how far he can go to give force to the provisions relating to discipline is now a matter to be passed upon by the Supreme court.

In the form in which the case now stands, the suggestion readily comes that unless the board makes rules that will cover violations of discipline, then the chief of the department is powerless, and the law becomes inoperative to that extent. The more reasonable proposition would seem to be that when the law is mandatory on the chief, as it is in this case, he has power to secure proper discipline in his department if the board should be in a deadlock the entire period of its existence, and never made a rule for the department. There are many things he cannot do, because their performance is required of others; but when he is at the head of the department he is commanded to "make and enforce" rules to secure discipline, and to that extent the law must be reasonable in enabling him to fill its requirement. As the interpretation of the statute now is, the chiefs of the police and fire departments in this city have no power to enforce their commands—there is no rule of discipline. Surely the lawmakers did not contemplate producing any such a state of affairs.

As showing the excellence of the law, however, and the care with which the Legislature sought to arrange police and fire department affairs, we point to the evident fact that it was intended that perfect discipline in existing departments should be maintained, and also to the further provision that if it is not done, any citizen, including the chiefs of the departments, can prefer charges, and the board is required to suspend the accused officer, if the charges are of a character that warrant suspension, until a hearing is had. This reaches the other phase referred to. In this case the accusation is neglect of duty and insubordination—certainly a charge sufficiently grave to warrant suspension and to require an immediate hearing. But in order to bring the case before the board it is necessary to file the charges—which should be done without delay. We make no comment at present on the merits of the dispute between the chief and the sergeant of police; but in vindication of himself in a matter to which his action has given publicity, the chief can do no less than have the charges filed as provided in section 11 of the police law; in justice to the accused sergeant a public hearing should be had, so that if he is innocent he may be relieved of the burden placed on him by the statement of his chief, and in maintenance of the rights of the public the culpable party in this dispute should be brought to terms, since it can be done lawfully, without awaiting the tedious process of appeal on the other point.

THE BUTLER BILL.

The Senate of the United States passed the Butler bill with a whoop as it were, notwithstanding the vigorous antagonism it met with; but this failing is so pronounced in the House of Representatives that final action upon it will hardly be forced by its friends and the probability is that the bill has gone about as far as it ever will.

From the outset it has been apparent that a chief aim of much of the discussion has been to make political capital among the constituents of the senators. Perhaps this object has been accomplished. Surely no other end was hoped for; for the senators must have known that there was little likelihood of the bill getting through the House, and even if it did that the President's veto would effectually settle it, inasmuch as enough votes could not be procured to pass it over his objections. Notwithstanding all this a great deal of time which could have been given to other matters has been taken up, and to all appearances wasted, for no improvement comes to the country therefrom.

MALE AND FEMALE TEACHERS.

We have nothing to say against the system in vogue here of selecting the male part of the teachers in public schools from among the fair sex. It is a special sphere of women to train young children, and quite proper that when qualified they should do it in public schools, at least until such time as they should be performing that duty in the home circle. At the same time it might not be amiss, even in these days of enlarged political privileges for women, to suggest that there should be a sufficient sprinkling of men teachers to act as a sort of balance wheel for the "new" woman is not likely to get along any better without the men than did her honored predecessor.

The question of the relative value of male and female teachers in public schools is brought forward by the proposition of Prof. F. R. Hoene, president of the board of education in a California city. At the meeting of the board on Tuesday evening he insisted that it was a necessity for the public schools that an increased proportion of male teachers should be employed, in order that the best results should follow. He had nothing to say, he stated, against female teachers, only he had learned by long experience and observation that when boys get to what is known as "the assertive, know-it-all" period of life—and girls too—the presence of masculine force and authority was necessary in the evolution of the schoolroom.

Prof. Hoene was in a position to talk intelligently on the subject, hence his advice had great weight, and as a consequence the school teachers of his city, who are nearly all females, are somewhat agitated; for he would put at least one male teacher in every school inside the principal, who might sometimes be a female; and then he would have an extra male member of the teaching corps. It's counsel receives more attention from the fact that, as president of the Boone academy, a private institution of learning conducted entirely by male teachers, all the unruly pupils in the public schools for years past had been turned over to him, and he had had phenomenal success in making them obedient to discipline, without treating them roughly.

It is just possible that President Hoene has not that full appreciation of a schoolmaam's ability that he might otherwise have had, if it had not been for receiving so many pupils to discipline because the women teachers had been unable to cope with them; but with due allowance for this there is merit in his suggestion. In the school experience of children there is needed the cultivation that comes from both male and female instructors—the natural provision which accompanies their parentage.

HIS WAY OF FIXING IT.

Rev. V. Marshall Law is a prominent Baptist clergyman of Oakland, Cal. On Sunday last he talked on the different creeds of modern Christendom. In his sermon he stated that religious people are at present passing through a crisis of superficial centre for the unity of all Christendom. He asserts that this means that Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Campbellites, Episcopalians and more than a hundred other kinds of Christians should all cease to exist and all be born again into a new organization to be called by some general name like "The Church of Christ." He goes on further to say that there is now one kind of Christian unity in what may be called the essential idea of the Scriptures—all these 140 sects believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and in the atonement of Calvary; but that there is no doubt that about 130 of these sects are wholly useless and injurious to the advancement of Christianity; and he does not believe it practicable or feasible to merge all into one common form of worship. His plan for the unity of Christendom he fixed up as follows:

Of the ten different kinds of Christianity which would doubtless cover all I would name six as follows: The Greek, Roman, Anglican and Presbyterian churches, to which I would add the Salvation army and the Quakers. The other four are only down for good measure. In the six mentioned I believe that all reasonable sincere Christians who have not an ambition to serve, or a magnetic personality to pamper, could find a congenial home.

It cannot be claimed that there is anything novel in men proposing to fix up a religion for Christianity, as Mr. Law does; they have been doing that for hundreds of years, and are still at it. From the way they go on, the only logical conclusion that can be reached is that those who do the fixing up regard themselves as saviors and the Master as a subject of their salvation. If Christ had wanted six or ten or any other number of kinds of Christianity He might have said so; but in that event He would not have been Christ. Neither did He attempt to make an aggregate of conglomerate creeds. He gave one code of principles, instituted one organization with Himself at the head, and acting through commissioned representatives, according to divinely appointed rules. That was His Church. All the other suggested plans for unity in Christendom may be very pretty to the human vision; yet it would seem to be worth while for those who really desire to accomplish an acceptable union to do so upon the revelation of Christ, in the way He appoints and takes active part in directing, and not as Tom, Dick and Harry among men suggest that it should be done.
