THE LABOR TROUBLE

Serious Conflict Between Striking Miners and Non-Union Men.

THE STATE MILITIA CALLED OUT

The Men Anxious to Fight.—Miners Strongly Intrenched.—More Trouble Feared.

CHARLESTON, Va., March 1.—Dispatches from the scene of last night's fight between the striking miners and nonunion men in Wyatt's Eagle mine, say that many of the attacking miners were drunk and intoxicated. The attacked men replied with vigor to the assailants' fire. It is said that not more than a hundred parts repeated them. It is said that three of Wyatt's men were killed, but this is contradicted. The Fayette county sheriff was on the ground with fifty deputies but will not feel able to cope with the rioters if they return for troops. Wyatt's men are furious, it is reported, and are anxious for another battle.

A later account says that after last night's conflict striking party went to the Montgomery and Haley mines for reinforcement. They returned at 3 a. m. 1,000 strong. Wyatt's men are strongly entrenched in the mountains, seven companies of militia are on the ground. At the latest accounts the fight had not been renewed.

The excitement still runs high, but it is now outbreaks are now feared. One is dead, and six are severely wounded, according to the official report of the night affray. Another telegram says it looks as if the only waiting for the arrival of the troops to end in making another attack.

Commissioner Roosevelt cites a case of a certain clerk dismissed from the treasury department for political reasons, and says that his attention was called to the fact, Carlisle took the position that it was not a violation of the civil service law to remove a man for political reasons. IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Gladstone Delivers Probably His Last Speech in the House.

LONDON, March 1.—Gladstone was loudly cheered this afternoon as he entered the house of commons.

The Commons then took up the question, That the house of lords' amendment to the local government bill be considered. Gladstone rose and addressed the house in his full, resonant voice, barring a slight hoarseness, but with marvelous energy and vigor. He said the government felt that the operation of restoring amendments will result in one house in another and continued long enough. (Loud cheering.) To continue the process would be the loss of dignity of both houses and the government had decided to stop the operation and take a decisive course. The government had two alternatives, namely, accepting all hope of passing the bill, or accepting it under protest with the hope of soon reversing it. The government had adopted the latter course. (Cheers.) Gladstone continued: "We have now reached an onslaught. It is certain that the time seems to multiply the while work of the house of commons. In regard to the present bill the government desires to save something out of the wreck. It has therefore accepted the amendments not with the declaration that the differences between the houses are not temporary and usual. This state of things, I am compelled to say, cannot continue. (Prolonged cheers.) An issue has been joined between the assembly elected by the people and an assembly composed by many men of wealth and talents of considerable variety. Once upon the issue stood go, no doubt, to a higher authority than that of the house of commons, namely the authority of the nation (cheers), which must be the last resort under a system like ours. (Loud cheers and opposition cheers.)

When that judgment is to be formed is a question which the gentlemen whose can decide.

Gladstone closed by asking the house to accept the lords' amendments.

Hon. A. J. Balfour, the minority leader, rose amid cheers to reply. He said Gladstone's speech was an eloquent appeal to the ancient constitution of the realm. He asked why the government [illegible]

A SERIOUS CHARGE.

Trial of Frank Brown in the Third District Court Today.

A DOMESTIC SERVANT COMPLAINS.

The Defendant's Attorney Takes Exception to an Article in a Morning Contemporary.

In Chief Justice Merrill's court this morning the trial of Frank Brown took place. The defendant is charged with rape, alleged to have been committed upon Martha Beeves, on December 25, 1893, in the Twentieth ward of this city. The prosecution was represented by Judge Maginnis (assistant district attorney), and Attorney General Nye; Attorney V. C. Gerrard appeared for the accused.

The case is a somewhat peculiar one, but the facts are of such a kind that the less said about them is a commendable newspaper practice. The young woman Beeves is almost grown up in age and her mental status is of an inferior order. She was employed as a domestic servant in the house of the accused, who is a married man with a family of small children, in Cottonwood. It is alleged that Brown, on the night of December 25, taking the time his wife was in adjoining room, induced the girl to drink a glass of wine in which he had placed a powder, thinking it would put her in a condition of helpless stupefaction, so he commited the offense complained of. She Beeves was arrested on Christmas morning, charged with rape, and while some of her statements somewhat differed from those of the certain facts of the matter, enough was left to show that the girl had been ruined, and some of her statements were of such a character as to show that she was in a condition of helplessness.

SOMETHING OBJECTIONABLE.

Before the trial began Attorney General called the court's attention to a half column article which appeared in the Salt Lake Herald this morning with reference to this case, and which, he said, was of such a character that he thought he ought to have the privilege of satisfying the jury and read it, in order that he might learn whether the defendant was likely to be prejudiced by it.

Judge Merrill—What are you going to do about that, Mr. Dolliver, Attorney General claims to will submit to a newspaper article referring to this case. Of course the court is not responsible for what the newspapers may do or say.

Judge Maginnis—What do you do about it?

Attorney Gennell said that if the jury, or any one of their number, had read the article it would be just the same as if they went to the jail and read the statements of the case before the trial, it being in the nature of an interview.

Judge Maginnis—I do not see that these should be any reflection cast on the jury, but I have no objection to counsel asking the question.

Attorney Dunnigan—I would be pleased if your honor would read this article.

Judge Merrill—I did read it this morning, but I do not know anything about it now. That is all the impression it had upon me. Of course I can only take newspaper articles such grains as I have good reason for so doing. Gentlemen, I know how people like to read these things in the newspapers, but it made not the slightest impression on me.

Attorney Gennell believed the court ought to take some cognizance of the publication of such an article in a case which was pending, after the jury had been sworn and we had in the hands of the court bailiff, but allowed to go their way until this morning.

Judge Merrill—Well, I'm sorry for the better part of value." I do not care to tackle the newspapers. (Laughter.)

Attorney Dunnigan—Some of the jurors who had read of them had read the article in question, and each one answered that he had not seen anything of it.

The matter then dropped, and on the suggestion of Justice Maginnis, Chief Justice Merrill asked that the trial proceed, and witnesses were called, and all persons having no business in court were requested to leave the room.

NINETEENTH WARD CONCERT.

A Splendid Entertainment of Vocal and Instrumental Music Last Night.

One of the finest ward concerts given in this city the present winter was presented in the Nineteenth ward meeting house last night before a large and delighted audience. It was for a worthy purpose, the proceeds going to augment the organ fund. The affair was planned by and entrusted to the care of M. J. Thomas, chorister of the choir, and to him largely is the brilliant success due.

Throughout the rendition of the program he acted as master of ceremonies and was ably assisted by Alvin Hoseley, the popular and efficient choir organist.

The initial number was the Whipporwill song, rendered by the choir in a manner that called forth a warm burst of applause. "I Would That My Love" was then so winningly rendered by Misses Carrie Howard and Ella Pike. For an encore the latter sang the first verse of the same song and repeated. Master Clarence Pike, the child musical prodigy, then sang, "Mamma's Boy." Master Pike is a marvelous expression and tenderness of feeling not often seen in one so young. For an encore he sang the celebrated "Old Infantry, "Have Courage, My Boy, I say Not."

It was the unanimous opinion, after Alvin Hoseley had played two organ solos, that the young organist of Salt Lake will have to look well to the preservation of their laurels lest they be successfully taken from them by Mr. Hoseley, who gave evidence of possessing more manifest. "O Lady Fair Hand" and "O Dreamed I Dared to Matter Hair" were well received from the popular Howard, Misses Thomas Howard, Utah's great vocalist, Willard Weiss, was given a most hearty welcome and he was with feeling and pathos. The part of the audience that he did not continue the almost singular fate constitution of the law for their home after the last played his first session, he repeated in two encores. In fact, Young's "Bell Heated Maid" and Mackay's "Mistaken" were encored, and the latter occasion of most merriment. George D. Pyper's tenor and Horace Ensign's baritone solos both called forth the deepest expression of appreciation and each gave an encore. The xylophone solo by Andrew Hooley and the mandolin and guitar selection by the Nonpareil quartette club were also of a high order.

In Honor of Mrs. E. B. Wells.

Mrs. E. B. Wells was pleasantly surprised by a party of about forty friends at her residence in East Waterloo last evening. The occasion of the affair was that the estimable lady yesterday reached the sixty-sixth annos, mile stone in life's journey. Her real birthday, however, counts on the 29th of February, but as there is no such day on the calendar only once in four years it was decided to celebrate the event on the 28th. The principal invites in the affair were representatives of Relief and Utah Women's Press club, both of which Mrs. Wells is the founder.

There was a full quiet of the members and a novel response by each reciting a verse of poetry taken from the writings of the lady whose anniversary was being celebrated. To these were invitations of good will and eulogistic speeches and remarks of her friends Mrs. Wells replied briefly and feelingly. The occasion was rendered by the rendition of a number of selections of vocal and instrumental music. Another appreciative feature was the presentation to the lady of a basket of beautiful roses, other flowers and ferns, a gold pen and holder and a large number of subscriptions to Mrs. Wells's Exponent, of which she is the editor.

At 11 o'clock the party returned to the city having passed a most enjoyable evening at the home of a very dear friend.

The case involves the Homestead and Timber Index as against Mrs. Cole's claim for the Neon de Plume. The claims are in Tintic mining district. The case was decided by the register and receiver of the Land Office in favor of Mrs. Cole and recommending the cancellation of the Homestead and Timber entries. The decision of the register and receiver is that the location of the Roadside and Rubber are invalid as they were made on the Neon de Plume in 1885 and in that year the Neon de Plume was worked for the claim. The commissioner also decides that the Neon de Plume entry should be cancelled, as the survey for patent did not conform to the original survey of the ground, but was since wider. Mrs. Cole has been granted four months in which to file a corrected plat of the ground.

FIRST FIRE FOR DIVINE.

It Was Extinguished by the Use of the Chemical Engine.

A fire was discovered on the second floor of a three story building at 40 and Second South street shortly after nine o'clock last evening. The alarm was sounded and the fire brigade quickly responded, but it was not necessary to make use of any apparatus except the chemical engine to extinguish the blaze.

Zeolite Hunter has been keeping a boarding house in the upper part of the building, but failing pay her rent, the landlord took the furniture in payment and stored it in the front room on Second floor. The fire was in this furniture, and it is a query how it got started, as it is claimed that the room had not been occupied for several days. The building is owned by the Margetts estate. The loss is not very great.

A $25,000 Damage Suit.

The hearing of the $25,000 damage suit brought by John H. Lloyd against the Salt Lake City Railroad Co. was resumed in Judge Bartch's court this morning. The plaintiff alleges that on March 15th, 1891, the defendant company's conductor, while operating one of their cars, negligently and recklessly ran over and killed his minor child. The accident occurred near the corner of Fifth West and First South streets, and the child was shockingly mangled. The defense is a complete denial of the allegations as to negligence.

When the trial had proceeded for some time today, leave was given to plaintiff to amend the complaint, whereupon the defendant moved for a continuance and this was granted till May 1st. The jury was discharged.

"Every mountain range has its peculiar geological anomaly, and every mining camp some curious deposit, to exhibit.

"In one locality, rock of common sandstone—otherwise the most sterile rock—is found in precious metals, and in another the petrified trees of a primeval forest have for twenty years been mined and milled for silver."

HAULED DOWN THE FLAG

Lively Row on the Island of Raiatea, South Pacific.

The Man Who Hauled Down the French Ensign Sentenced to be Shot.

French colonist rents on the Island of Raiatea, one of the Society group in the South seas, pulled down the French flag from the newly erected government building on December 24 last. The trouble grew out of a difficulty between supporters of the French colonial government of the Tahiti district and traders of native, who are against the growing commercial influence of the French colonial government.

The news of the trouble came by private letter from Tahiti. Its main features are that the rebel who pulled down the flag had been delivered over to the French authorities and would be transported to the penal colony of New Caledonia, where five days after his arrival he would be shot.

On the receipt of the news at Papeete, Tahiti, that trouble had occurred at Raiatea the French transport Dubouzet was dispatched to the island, which is about 100 miles northwest of Tahiti. The mission had orders to get the man who had hauled down the flag or show the town off its coral foundations.

In answering several islands about two years ago the French government took up Raiatea. Some of the French traders who had grown wealthy through dealing in copra shells and other island products were not pleased with the change. Before the cession the island chiefs were supreme. With the acquisition by France came a heavy tax on the island, and the supporting of Europeanism laws. Where trolling had been comparatively free before, there were heavy taxes.

An existing tax, passed the time of the change. The notes then retarded. A French war vessel was sent from Tahiti and quieted the disturbance.

On December 24th, the day set for the opening of the new Town Hall at Raiatea, erected by the French colonial government, a French flag was hoisted on a long pole. The flag was not on the building, but alongside of it. As soon as the rebel faction of the community saw the flag flying in the breeze they became enraged. A meeting was called and it was decided to haul down the flag.

Lots were cast to see who should do the bold deed and it fell to a wealthy resident. He showed signs of weakness, but the ringleaders filled him with good toddy and he took hold of the Dutch courage to carry out the orders. To reach the outpoints it was necessary to break down the door of the new government building, and to gain access to the roof. The flag was duly hauled down and rolled up.

After the rebel had presented it to the tender they did not know what to do with it, it was an element on their hands. The leaders at last proposed that the flag be returned to the French authorities. This the majority of them present refused to allow and the dismounted flag was hauled.

The French officials immediately dispatched word to Papeete and inside of three days the French transport Dubouzet was lying off Raiatea. The capture went and sentenced the man who hauled down the flag was given by which five hours to be shot. Meanwhile the guns were run out and are seen there for action. The threat had the desired effect and the offending rebel was carried aboard. Great excitement prevailed in the island town during the visit of the war vessel.

The prisoner was taken to Papeete, and afterwards ordered sent to New Caledonia to be shot five days after reaching there. The order states that the orders for shooting the prisoner were issued at Papeete, so there is little doubt that the execution will be carried out.

News from the French South sea possessions is frequent, but most of it nowadays deals with attempts to throw off the yoke of oppressive colonial government.

When France, England, Germany and Spain began extending their commercial interests in the South sea each island of the group was a prize in the islands that would be valuable. The English government, although late in making a start, secured the Gilbert group and Ellice group. The Germans are strongly entrenched on the Marianne islands and Spain holds closely to the Caroline group. The trade of these different island groups is jealously watched by the nationality controlling them.

Eighty-one Years Old.

The children, grandchildren and some of the friends of Sister Sarah Le Chevalier assembled at her home in Pleasant Green on February 24th to celebrate the eighty-first anniversary of her birth. The company assembled at noon and extensive preparations had been made under the lead of the good things of the land. After dinner was over the exercises commenced, consisting of songs, recitations and speeches, which continued until supper time. After supper the company continued to enjoy themselves until midnight, some seeming to enjoy themselves more than those in Lesbian circle. It was a merry gathering, and a happy time was spent, which will be long remembered by those present.
