SCHOOL BUILDING ACCEPTANCE.

Recommendation to the Board Regarding Stone, Brick and Plaster Work on the Webster.

The committee on buildings and grounds of the board of education visited and officially inspected the new Webster schoolhouse in the Tenth ward this forenoon. The inspection was, primarily, to see that the stone, brick and plaster work had been done according to plans and specifications and in accordance with the terms of the contract. It was found that all of the conditions had been complied with, that the work commenced was ready for final and formal acceptance by the board, and the committee will recommend in a report to be presented this evening.

The building is now thoroughly heated, night and day, and its interior is fast taking on a finished appearance. Within another week it will be complete in all its details as far as called for in existing contracts. The only exception of work still to be in the waiting, which will not be put on until next year for the reason that the experience of the past has proved satisfactory of absolutely new buildings is unpredictable on account of warping and "buckling in."

Rents collected by the Utah Title Insurance and Trust company.

PROSPEROUS PRESTON.

Its Prospects Industrially, Its Progress in Educational Affairs.

Preston, Dec. 21, 1897.

To the Editor:

Preston is located twenty-seven miles north of Logan City, just over the Utah line, at the terminus of the Cache Valley branch of the O. S. L. R. R. Fourteen years ago the flat on which Preston is located was the common herd ground for Franklin and Richmond. Now a flourishing town of more than eight hundred inhabitants occupies the plain. It is not putting it too strong to say that more business is done in Preston than in any other town of Cache Valley. Logan excepted. Its future, too, is bright, for when the Mink Creek canal, now nearing completion, is finished the valley and even the hill slope will be capable of cultivation. The town is now rapidly growing by additions of the best element from the larger cities of Utah and surrounding states.

The Oneida Stake academy is a very attractive feature for southern and central Idaho. This worthy institution is in its fourth year of its existence, and from its inception to this writing, its progress has been very marked. The attendance has grown fast, and the teachers are vieing with each other in the thoroughness of work done. Joseph, the principal, J. E. McMurrin, and the faculty are striving to place the academy on a plane with the foremost institutions of its kind in modern educational methods. The grand aim is to make the students thorough in their studies, and to develop in them power of independent thought. A thorough course is offered. The faculty is composed of eight efficient teachers, some of whom are specialists in their line.

A literary society is a marked feature of the academy. The best talent in Utah and Idaho have been secured and have given to the report of their researches on various topics. Many bright missionaries have come from the institution as heralds of truth to the nations of the earth. And we are reminded that letters from "Alex U" within the last week have disturbed the serenity of this region, causing no little ripple on the social wave. Yes, six such letters have swooped down upon members of the faculty and students of the institution. The question is, "Who next?"

ITS FIRST REGULAR FOLDER.

Oregon Short Line Issues a Handsome Map and Information Pamphlet.

The Oregon Short Line has just received an installment of its first regular folder. It is a handsome creation, showing its lines and connections in the clearest possible manner on a map that was specially drawn for the purpose. Besides that and its complete system of time tables it contains a fund of valuable information on "Utah and Idaho, the home of irrigation." On this subject the following comments are made:

"To Brigham Young must ever belong the credit of having introduced irrigation into the United States. He caused to be constructed—fifty years ago—where Salt Lake City now stands the first irrigation canal. No event in the history of western civilization is so important or far-reaching in its influence for good. From that small beginning began the irrigation which is now common to the agriculture of all the wonderful empire west of the Rocky Mountains. From that first canal developed the great systems which rapidly extended over Idaho and the adjoining states, and which now girdlems almost half of the United States. In the early stages of irrigation development, small systems were built by the union of the capital and labor of neighbors and friends. These co-operative systems were necessarily inexpensive, and were confined to localities where physical conditions were most favorable and where the land to be watered and the water were nearby.

"But later, when the marvelous success of the irrigation farmer became generally known, large amounts of aggregated capital under corporate management were invested in the construction of expensive systems which have overcome by engineering methods great physical difficulties, and brought water from long distances to the redemption of vast areas which now count but the hand of the farmer to be covered with productive and happy homes.

"In no portion of the arid region are there extensive systems more numerous than in Utah and Idaho, where favorable climatic conditions, the abundance of water, and the rare fertility of the soil conspire to make farming by irrigation certain of success."

For a Telephone Line.

Grand Valley Times: A company has been organized of Thompson and Moab parties to construct a telephone line from Moab to Thompson. Contracts have been let to A. M. Stocks and R. B. Smith for poles. Electric communication with the outside world has been one of the sad needs of this country. It has been agitated for in the past but has failed to receive the recognition needed to carry it forward until the present time. This move will be but the forerunner of additional lines and the introduction of the necessities of the age for man's comfortable existence.
