The Salt Lake ball team got even with Boise yesterday for the trouncing it received on Wednesday. Starkell was in the box for the Honest One, but he proved anything but a puzzle to the Salt Lake batters. He was walloped for 17 hits, which were good enough to win the game by a score of 9 to 2.

Essick delivered the mysteries for our bunch, and held the enemy down to eight scattered hits.

The team from this town, while it made a few errors, played in great form, and showed improvement all along the line. Their batting, sacrificing and base running was of a high order.

The proposition of transferring the Boise team to Helena, as first published in these columns, some time ago, is being revived at Boise, and it looks like the team would go.

TRYING HARD FOR FIGHT.

Bob Fitzsimmons and Jack O'Brien Want Injunction Against Mayor.

Philadelphia, July 14.—Counsel for the Philadelphia Baseball Exhibition company, Ernest H. Crowhurst, sporting editor of the Evening Telegraph; Robert Fitzsimmons and Joseph A. Hagen, better known as "Philadelphia Jack O'Brien," today filed a bill in equity in the common pleas court in their behalf against Mayor Weaver and Director of Public Safety Smyth, who is at the head of the police department, praying for an injunction restraining them from interfering with the Fitzsimmons-O'Brien bout, which is scheduled to take place Saturday, July 16, or Saturday, July 23. The bill was presented to Judge Audenreid in chambers and he fixed 11 a. m. tomorrow for a hearing.

The bill sets forth that the Philadelphia Baseball Exhibition company has granted the use of the National League baseball grounds for a sparring match between Fitzsimmons and O'Brien and that a portion of the proceeds was to be devoted to the Evening Telegraph free ice fund; that the exhibition was scheduled for July 8 and that the mayor notified the management that he would stop the exhibition if the interested parties proceeded to go on with it. The complainants further allege that the stoppage of the exhibition caused them to lose $2,000, which had been expended in the preparation of the entertainment.

It is urged that the exhibition is to be a purely scientific one and not a prize fight. No decision is to be rendered nor is any bet nor wager to be decided. The contest is to be friendly and a like sum is to be given to each of the contestants based upon the receipts.

It is contended that the mayor exceeds his authority when he gives notice that he will not allow the entertainment to go on.

BACK TO THE FOOTLIGHTS.

Bob Fitzsimmons to Tread Historic Boards Instead of Box.

Benscnhurt Bob has thrown the boxing gloves into Gravesend Bay, says Feft Hook.

He is not to resurrect them for twelve months—O'Brien, McCoy, Munroe, anybody to the contrary.

With the mitts went the gauntlets. The latter were shied at the footlights, and until the theatrical season of 1904-5 has cashed in there is to be no more of Fitzsimmons in the ring.

The freckled bison of the wallops is tied up with "A Fight for Love," a melodrama, for which he has rehearsed, and in which Mrs. Fitzsimmons, who was Julia May Gifford, is to star. This vehicle to possible histrionic laurels and titles is to be put on Aug. 27, at the Metropolis theater in New York, and the light heavyweight champion has decided not to train for another go until "A Fight for Love" has been fought and knocked out.

Rehearsals are to begin. Robert has gone down into his bank account and has promised to pay the bills of his company so as to insure their presence until the play is put on.

Is Robert angry over the action of Mayor Weaver of Philadelphia, in stopping his contest with Jack O'Brien?

Oh, no! He isn't angry; he is ablaze. You could light a cigar on what Mr. Fitzsimmons said regarding mayors and things in the Quaker City.

Robert's English was the color of a rainbow, and there is a report in town that Mayor Weaver has ordered a pair of ear coolers as a result. What he least understands is the fact that while O'Brien—Fitz was barred by Philadelphia's chief magistrate, the same official O. K.'d the contest between Danny Dougherty, ex-bantamweight champion, and Tommy Love, who went on and tried to beat each other to death in a splendidly contested six-round bout.

Tom Sharkey refereed this bout, which drew heavily from the crowd that went over to see the big fellows go.

DEFENDS YOUNG CORBETT.

Otto Floto, Denver Sporting Editor, Does The Trick as of Yore.

Some of the eastern critics are endeavoring to find fault with Young Corbett for his action in declaring off the battle with Britt.

Pray, and what for?

Do they want the little champion to sit in New York all during the sweltering summer, with no prospect of making money, when wine and birds are a staple article on the market? asks Otto Floto of the Denver Post.

Not much.

The Kid must see the races; he must attend the roof garden; he must dress in proper Broadway style; he likes his cold bottle and warm bird. It takes money to enjoy these little necessities of life and he must have them.

Was waiting for Britt to get ready to name the date of battle going to get the items mentioned above?

Not much.

The Denverite has not the income of Rockefeller or Carnegie, and the only way in which he could produce the "William bill" was to fight or negotiate a "friendly loan" from some of the bookmakers that make the Metropole their headquarters.

So he notified Britt that unless the battle between them took place immediately the bout, so far as Corbett was concerned, was a thing of the past. In the meantime he began to look about for available opponents.

Britt notified him that the bout would not take place until next December. This was more than our champion could stand and he replied to the "Brothers Britt," Jimmy and Willie, that he considered himself free to fight whom he saw fit.

"The Britts, "Willie and Jimmy," are at Los Angeles, and what they are saying through the columns of the press concerning the Denverite leaves little unsaid.

The whole matter serves Corbett right. He or his manager had no right to sign a set of articles that contained so foolish a clause as to prohibit Corbett meeting any other opponent prior to his meeting with Britt. It was a shrewd move on the part of the Brothers Britt, and a most foolish stunt on the part of little Harry Pollok, who is generally keen and cunning in such matters.

Now that Corbett has given it out that he will meet any man of his weight in the world, we may expect soon to learn that he and McGovern have again been matched. This would be a great card for Philadelphia and draw thousands of spectators from New York.

Corbett is a great drawing card about Gotham. The match with Britt will keep, for Jimmy knows that he cannot meet any other fighter in the world and draw one-third the house he can with Young Corbett. Jimmy may fuss and fret and fume, but he will cool down and then he will be ready to sign any time the little champion asks him to.

On the other hand, no one can blame Corbett. He likes and enjoys the good things in this world, and knows it takes money to get them. Now he is arranging to get the money and then enjoy them.

Wait Britt's pleasure?

Not much.

World's Fair Does Not Belong to St. Louis But to the United States.

AN EDUCATIONAL PROJECT.

Our Exposition Views Furnish Best Means of Studying Wonderful Exhibits.

President Francis of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in an article which recently appeared in one of the New York papers, speaks of the St. Louis World's Fair as follows:

"There are contained within the Exposition exhibits which are of the deepest and liveliest interest to the public, a large portion of whom must necessarily be prevented by circumstances from seeing them. We have gathered here the highest achievements of man, in art, science and invention. We have the cream of the art of the civilized world and the latest and best improvements in machinery and industrial methods. We have an ethnological exhibit comprising villages of primitive people which it would be impossible for even the most persistent globe-trotter to see."

The Forest City World's Fair Art Portfolios, the official series of Exposition views which we are now distributing among our readers, contains photographic reproductions of the best of all the curious, interesting, marvelous and beautiful exhibits of which President Francis speaks.

As he says, a large portion of the public will necessarily be prevented from visiting the Fair and The Forest City Series is indeed a boon to those who are not able to make the trip. The complete work consisting of 30 parts (16 large views in each part) will form a complete pictorial and descriptive history of the Exposition, and it becomes almost a duty to secure this valuable publication, when it can be so easily obtained.

Although the regular price is 25 cents for each portfolio, we have made arrangements whereby we are enabled to offer the portfolios to our readers at only 10 cents each, to cover the cost of handling, wrapping, addressing and mailing.

Of course, everyone who visits the Fair at St. Louis will want The Forest City series as a record and souvenir of their trip.

WRITING FOR NEWSPAPERS.

One of the sign marks of the novice in journalism is to write to an editor after, in all probability, having got an introduction and say, "I should be glad to do any sort of work." Let not would be young journalists fall into this irritating, though, of course, innocent, pitfall. Even if you have an introduction—which is only useful if the person giving you the introduction is of any importance, either socially or to the editor to whom the introduction is made—get ready some practical suggestion which you can lay before the editor or make none at all and wait till you have one.

Now, the kind of article which young writers are so fond, as a rule, of producing, in which they give their opinions on, say, the modern novel or on the value of free libraries, has no commercial value at all in the journalistic world unless it is strikingly clever or witty, which, as a general rule, it is not. Literary subjects, abstract ones, impersonal ones, should all be avoided till the position is secure, and the name of the writer is a guarantee of interesting work. But, then, what are the subjects that the novice can employ with any chance of success?

Now, here, what natural cleverness there is in the would be journalist must show itself. For the demands of the reading public you must have some sort of intuitive sense. If you have it, you can cultivate it, and in time it gets second habit. If you haven't it, and it is extremely possible that a highly intellectual man or woman could not have it, then you had better abandon the notion of being a modern journalist. But most everyday folk with everyday tastes and interests have it, and it needs only a little encouraging.

A FROCK OF CERISE VOILE.

This is a frock of cerise voile made with one of the much exploited all round gathered skirts trimmed at the bottom with little flounces headed by bands of embroidery.

The corsage is a blouse of mousseline de soie, over which are a charming bolero and sleeve emplecement of guipure lace. Voile forms the little upper sleeves, from under which hang bouffant affairs of mousseline.

A Frenchy touch of black is added by way of velvet bows at the neck, waist and on the sleeves.

WOMEN WORKERS.

Of the 5,500,000 females over ten years of age who were engaged in wage earning occupation in the United States in 1900 3,373 were ministers of religion, 11,021 artists and teachers of art, 1,010 lawyers, 2,193 journalists, 7,387 physicians and surgeons, 74,153 bookkeepers and accountants, 34,345 merchants and dealers, 1,271 officials of banks and companies, 86,118 stenographers and typewriters and 22,556 telegraphists and telephone operators.

A COUNTRY BREAKFAST ROOM.

A bright and cheery breakfast room in a country cottage has broad, low windows of leaded glass—pale amber and green. The wall paper is a soft, clear green which is cool and reposeful in effect and harmonizes with the weathered oak furniture. The frieze above the green paper has large poppies in shades of deep tan with natural green foliage on a ground of the same tone as the paper.

"THE CHERRY GIRL."

It is understood that the Shuberts are trying to secure the American rights to "The Cherry Girl," a London musical comedy. The entertainment in its present shape will need considerable revision for the American stage. "The Cherry Girl" is said to be a feminine version of "The Prince and the Pauper," the dramatization of the Mark Twain book in which Elsie Leslie appeared. Instead of a prince changing places with a poor lad, a young queen changes places with a girl of the people.
