JAPANESE GIRL WANTS TO STAY.

Secures a Writ of Habeas Corpus And Will Have a Hearing On Saturday.

STORY OF HOW SHE CAME HERE

Was Smuggled Across the Boundary into This Country—The Slave Trade Among Her Countrywomen.

Hana Takeda, the little Japanese girl who is being held for deportation, has applied for a writ of habeas corpus, and the request has been granted by Judge Marshall of the U. S. district court.

Hana will be given a hearing Saturday, Jan. 21, and she will be represented by the law firm of Twomey & Twomey, of which United States Commissioner Twomey is a member. The request sets forth that the girl came into the United States legally, and the immigration bureau which caused her arrest has no jurisdiction.

Hana Takeda was arrested in Victoria alley at the same time as Frank Sanura was taken into the toils on the charge of being a keeper of slaves, upon information furnished by D. S. Isaki and K. Sakamoto of the Imperial Japanese troup then exhibiting in Salt Lake.

Hana is a beautiful little girl, apparently not over 16 years of age, and she has been in this country considerably less than a year. Of the slave traffic which brought her here, according to the belief of the immigration inspectors, D. S. Isaki explained that in Japan there is a regular organization of men who buy peasant girls in the rural districts of Japan and ship them to America in charge of masters, each girl being valued at from $200 to $300. This clique of men do a thriving business and make considerable money on this traffic.

In investigating the case of Hana the United States inspectors gradually got from her the story that she had been approached while working in Japan by a man who assured her she could make a fabulous amount of money in America. He induced her to come with him, and finally she was shipped across the water to Victoria, B. C., someone besides herself paying her fare. From Victoria she was smuggled across the border, detained for a while in a coast town, and finally sent to Salt Lake to find lodgings in Victoria alley, with six or eight more of her kind.

The law in the case provides, according to the immigration inspectors, that any alien who does not enter America through a regular immigration port is a subject for deportation, if measures are taken to deport her during the first year of her residence here. In this case the evidence against the girl has been collected and forwarded to Washington for action by the head of the department, and the local office is awaiting the receipt of an order to deport her or release her, as the evidence may suggest to the authorities.

The application for a writ of habeas corpus compels the inspectors to show cause why they are holding the Japanese girl in prison, and it is expected that before the hearing before Judge Marshall on the 21st, an order covering the case will have been received from Washington.

SUN[illegible] SERMONS [illegible] CHURCHES.

Rev. [illegible] Young Discourses on the Divinity of the Mission of Jesus Christ.

REV. SIMPKIN ON CLEANING.

"Infidel, Agnostic and Christian," the Subject at the Unitarian Church.

Rev. Benjamin Young preached yesterday morning in the First Methodist church from the text, "And John, calling unto him two disciples, sent them to Jesus, saying, 'Art Thou He that should come? or look we for another?'" (Luke vii, 19). Mr. Young said in part:

"Men ask today, is Jesus the Son of God? We say, look at history, study human experience. You cannot understand civilization in any intelligible sense without reference to Jesus of Nazareth. He gives harmony to history; in Him we see reflected the purpose of the Father. To see this reflected in any other in such a degree is impossible. The ages are best interpreted through Jesus Christ, and eternity has no meaning without Him. It is fruitless to look for another; there is none like Him. He is incomparable. In Him men may see God. He is the revelation of God. For proof of this He points us to things which are manifest in history and in human experience. Christ's presence in the world is revealed in numerous ways. His influence in the world is seen on every hand. Some existing things in life we have accepted as a matter of course, but their origin can be traced to the Christ doctrine.

"Take civilization itself; it is of peculiar fabric. There are in it many elements which mar its form; there are in it many things to be condemned; there are in it some things that must be eliminated or it will go to pieces. But the binding elements of civilization, the things which constitute its glory, are in a large measure the results of the teaching of the Master."

SIMPKIN ON "GLEANING."

Rev. P. A. Simpkin of Phillips Congregational church preached yesterday morning on "Gleaning," and in the course of his discourse said:

"The one divine purpose that runs through history and will not be broken, despite all the thwarting forces and heart-breaking delays which are inherent in human worthlessness and sin, ever toward one end, is the saving of man in his highest and best development.

"The emergence of this purpose with such clearness and strength in the teaching and message of Jesus, has given to the world a comprehension of its own value and God's wonderful love that has caused the development of a marvelously active and devoted spirit, which is akin to the purpose of God, and in line with its movement. The hand of God is gleaning in the stubble of the centuries more persistently than ever in his effort to save men at his high point. The time we know, and are carried upon, is more wonderful in its manifestation of this spirit and purpose than any other that men have known.

"The age is full of salvatory forces. A thousand hands are reaching for the worth in man. Briareus is realized in the century, and God is moving in the days in 10,000 ways. Education and uplift by way of pulpit, school and press, institute, library and art gallery; by music and speech, by color and form, by education, by common and mutual service, and by sympathy, are bringing humanity to a joining of hands with its God for the realization of the highest and best. God is in all the stir and movement of this service, moving as recreatively in the truth that is gripping and uplifting the world, as really as He moved in its creation in the ages of the beginning of things.

AT UNITARIAN CHURCH.

Rev. Frank F. Eddy of the Unitarian church preached yesterday morning, on "Infidel, Agnostic and Christian." The preacher said in part:

First, as to the infidel. Taken in its broad sense and assuming all the implications the loose usage of the term admits, an absolute infidel is a moral impossibility. He would need to be faithless and unfaithful alike, denying at once every higher sanction and motive of human progress. Because we are human, we cannot become an absolute infidel. I would not call my dog an infidel so long as in his honest eyes I can read trust and fidelity. To be an infidel usually means to deny what the established majority of any particular period holds sacred. The spelling of the epithet sometimes changes, without changing the meaning. To deny today the divine right of property gets one called an anarchist or a socialist. That is to say, they brand one as a social infidel.

"It is a fine thing to be an infidel for conscience sake. There are always opportunities enough to be a coward for policy, for money, or for ease. No one will ever get a chance to be an infidel for any of these things. He will get the cat-o'-nine-tails and a handful of salt.

"Suddenly remove from human history all that the various infidels have done for the world in their various epochs and we would be rubbing our eyes and wondering why the sun of human progress was having an eclipse.

"The agnostic finds himself thwarted by the old Adam. Before he realizes it he is in the thick of the fight. It is just human nature. Herbert Spencer seems of all men peculiarly born to be an agnostic, accepting only that which could adequately be proven.

"If there is anything that ought to make one grateful to a divine providence, it is that human nature has prevented men from being the kind of Christians they thought they wanted to be. Take that type of man who imagines himself to be some kind or other of a saint, set apart with those of his tribe for the glory of God. His whole interpretation of things is partial, not universal. He assumes a chosen people, a holy Bible, a Christ dying vicariously for human sins, a divinely instituted church, all to save whom? To save those who are not brave enough to be infidels, or wise enough to be agnostics, or simple and loving enough to read the real gospel of Christ. Truly the wheat and the chaff are winnowed in various ways."

DR. PINKERTON'S SERMON.

Rev. Dr. Pinkerton preached yesterday morning, in the Central Christian church, from the text, "What shall I do to be saved?" The speaker said in part:

"There are two words here which I wish to emphasize: they are 'do' and 'saved.' Salvation is misunderstood. We speak of it as being an acceptance in a few moments. I prefer the word 'evolution.' Nobody is saved in the absolute until the life is perfected. We confuse 'salvation' with 'forgiveness.' Forgiveness means restored to a proper relationship with God. The first thing that needs emphasis is that the soul must come in relationship with God, until the wound that sin has made has been healed.

"The next to be emphasized is the word 'do.' I wish you to note that not what I must 'feel,' nor what opinions I may have, but what I must 'do' is the point. Sin has estranged me from God. What must I do to get back and be restored? One thing is evident—I must be, in reality, a child of God. The new life thus begun will find consummation in an eternal life."

Bishop F. S. Spalding preached a sermon yesterday morning, in St. Paul's Episcopal church, that urged an aim for the higher life. His text was from Philippians III, 13-15; "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting the things that are behind, and reaching forth unto those things that are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." In the course of his discourse, the speaker said:

"We become so fixed in our habits of thought and conduct that we act almost as automatons and we need something from without to jolt us off the track of our prejudices. This came to St. Paul outside the Damascus gate, and of all the reasons for the troubles of life may be that they compel us to stop and think and so let new light into our minds in spite of our narrowness."

"In spite of our protestations to the contrary, we judge ourselves not by our possessing real and noble traits of character, but by our possessing things whose possession is often a disgrace rather than an honor. Theoretically we believe that all men are created equal, but we do not act on our belief by helping those who most need our help to live up to the possibilities of their manhood, and our religion lacks power because our God is not personal, and it is in proportion as one's loyalty to God is a personal loyalty that his religion affects his life."

BOOK OF MORMON NAMES.

Prof. John M. Mills Discusses Them at University Sunday School.

In the University Sunday school yesterday Prof. Mills spoke on "Book of Mormon Geography." In his discussion he made a general map, which, he said, could not be regarded as an accurate one, for lack of definite information on geographical points. However, groups of cities were pointed out by the speaker and a relative location, with reference to the city of Zarahemla, was given. A point was brought out in connection with proper names. Many persons have been bothered with the name "Anti-Nephi-Lehi," the converted king of the Lamanites. As "Anti" means "against," it has been impossible to understand the name after reading the history. Prof. Mills argued that this son of the "old king" was given the combined names of three persons of note, one of them being "Anti." As proof of this the statement that the Nephites called their cities by the names of the men that founded them was quoted. Some times two men joined in naming a city, ("Lehi-Nephi" and "Ani-Anti" for example). "Ani" and "Anti" gave their names to a city then. "Anti" must have been a great character for his name, with affixes is found throughout the Book of Mormon. The following names are good examples: Antipas, Antionum, Antiomno, Antiparah and Antipus. To show that the Nephites had a custom of making proper names by adding affixes, the lecturer referred to a number of examples, among which were the following: Nephi-Nephihah, Moroni-Moronihah, Ammon-Ammonihah, etc.

The lectures are given in Barratt hall every Sunday at 12:30. All are invited to attend.

Rev. Carlisle P. B. Martin, L.L.D.
Of Waverly, Texas, writes: "Of a morning, when first arising, I often find a troublesome collection of phlegm, which produces a cough and is very hard to dislodge; but a small quantity of Ballard's Horehound Syrup will at once dislodge it, and the trouble is over. I know of no medicine that is equal to it, and it is so pleasant to take. I can most cordially recommend it to all persons needing a medicine for throat or lung trouble." 25c, 50c and $1.00. BOTH WANTED THE BABY.

Father Took it Away and Scene and Threatened Arrest Followed.

A husband, who is separated from his wife, a baby girl he wanted to see, and hurried calls for the police and the sheriff are the elements in a daylight kidnapping affair which greatly disturbed Mr. and Mrs. James E. Graham yesterday afternoon.

It is the old story of a man and woman who have found married life unhappy and have separated, the mother clinging to her child, and the father longing for a visit with his little one.

Yesterday Mrs. Graham, who lives a block away from her husband, was wheeling the baby in a go-cart in the vicinity of her home. At the corner of Second South and Fourth West streets the husband came along, and seeing his child, he snatched it from the carriage and started hurriedly for his rooms at 229 south Fourth West street. Mrs. Graham, deserting the go-cart, followed in haste, refusing to be shut out of the room, till, as she declares, she was forced out at the point of a revolver.

She then went in search of an officer, and locating Patrolman Joseph Bush she returned with him to the room, telling the officer her story between sobs as they went along. Once inside the room Officer Bush was startled to find Graham fondling the little baby girl in his arms in apparent unconcern of what had taken place. "My God, hasn't a man a right to see his own baby, his own little girl?" was the question with which he startled the patrolman who had come in ready to resist violence. "Isn't she mine? I have no use for that woman, but the baby I dearly love."

The mother, on the advice of the officer, went to the sheriff's office, as he had no warrant for the arrest of the man and was not sure of what crime he was apparently guilty. After Mrs. Graham had gone the officer reasoned with Graham, who was busy putting covers over his little infant, whom he imagined to be cold, and finally obtained his consent to returning the child to its mother. This information was telephoned to the sheriff's office where the mother was busy telling her story, and she returned at once to receive her little one.

After the incident closed, Mrs. Graham, in a highly nervous condition, stated that she feared for the future safety of the child, and that she believed Graham would continue to try and steal it. The couple are not divorced. Mrs. Graham states that they came here from Walla Walla, Wash., three months ago, and that their life here has not been pleasant, as it was not prior to their moving here. She has tried to secure a divorce, but learned that she had not lived here a sufficient length of time. She is now suing him for maintenace of the child. James E. Graham, the husband, is foreman of a blacksmith shop.
