A California Girl Rewarded for Kindness to a Traveler.

DESTROYED BY A BROKEN LEVEE.

Found a Dead Body—A Disappointed Fiancee—Accidentally Drowned —Shipment of Utah Cattle.

More than 10,000 acres of fine farming land is under water by the breaking of a levee near Woodland, Cal. Thousands of acres of grain will be destroyed.

Dennis Sessions, assistant carpenter on the steamer Jackson, fell into the river at Marysville, Yuba county, Cal., and was drowned. He was a native of Mexico, 45 years old, and had lived in Marysville.

There was a sad scene in the office of Coroner Clark of Sacramento on Thursday, when Miss Fay Underwood, the intended bride of Hugo Grau, visited the morgue a short time after her arrival from Kansas City. The Underwood started for Sacramento twenty-four hours before Kloss was killed by John Hurley last Monday morning. They were to have been married on her arrival.

Philip Mariel, a soldier, discovered the body of an unknown man on Pacific beach, Cal., Wednesday forenoon and reported it through the Fort Point signal-flagging station, to the coroner. The body had evidently been a long time in the water, and was so battered as to defy identification. It was dressed in a suit of black diagonal, with a brown overcoat. A diamond pin and a silver watch and chain were the only valuables found in the clothing. The body was removed to the morgue.

Lamoin Rosmerang, Jan. 30: The Union Pacific had a swift train of mails through the city this morning. There was nineteen car loads of the mails from Cache valley, Utah, and they were being given a fast passenger run all the way through. They left Ogden yesterday morning and will be sended in Omaha early in the morning. Two engines took them over the hill from here to Cheyenne in two hours and fifty minutes. They were fine large beeves, and owing to this fact a number of them were down to the car but were righted here before starting over the hill.

A little after 9 o'clock Wednesday night as a west-bound freight train was passing through Pomona, Cal., a stranger attempted to board it and was thrown under the wheels. His arms and legs were badly crushed and mangled and his head frightfully cut and bruised. The man was seen to make the hobo signal to get on the train by City Marshal Lorbeer, of Pomona, who took charge of him as soon as he could be extracted from under the wheels after the train had been stopped. Marshal Lorbeer thought that the man was dead, but ascertained that he was still alive and had him taken to a house and cared for. He died next morning. The man gave his name as James Foster and that he was a miner by occupation. He is about 45 years of age and is unmarried.

Michael Foley, an employe of the Peerless Oil company at Pomona, Cal., thinks that his consideration and attention to a fellow-traveler several years ago was the most profitable act of his life. Michael has not only been bequeathed $5,000 of his ante of swiftly and kindness, but he has received a New York draft for that amount and has placed the same on deposit in a Los Angeles bank. In the month of August, 1894, Michael Foley was coming to California from New York on the Santa Fe overland, and on the train in Illinois he became acquainted with Jackson Bridgman, an elderly man, who was also coming to California. The latter was in poor health and alone. He aroused much attention along the route, but none of the passengers gave any care to the invalid except Foley, who, although a stranger, was moved to pity. Foley brought to his meals, arranged berths at night, and helped to cheer him to the morning. In fact, he rendered the sick man every attention and kindness. When they reached Los Angeles Bridgman took Foley's address, and in the next two years wrote him several times, once sending him a valuable Christmas present. For the last three years Foley has not heard anything of Bridgman. He has partially forgotten him when he received official notice several weeks ago that Bridgman had died in Lowell, Mass., after years of illness, and had left a large amount of property there, also that Foley was the heir to $5,000 cash, a special bequest of the deceased, because of kindness and politeness shown Bridgman on his way to California. Foley thought at first it was a practical joke that some one was playing on him, but instructed a Pasadena lawyer to look up the matter. He is a poor laboring man, a bachelor, about 45 years of age, and has worked for the Peerless Oil company for several months. He says he never had $200 at one time before in his life.

WHAT A COMMON HERD DID.

They Were Picked Up Here and There, but They Paid Handsomely.

We purchased 71 cows, bringing home the last cattle about Jan. 20. All but one became fresh, most of them in February, March and April, one in July and one in August. Seven were sold early in October, yet the average of the whole 71 to the 21st of October was 259.5 pounds of butter, as shown by our creamery account of butter made and sold, a total of 18,425.4 pounds. The 30 days in November show 890 pounds of butter made, or an average of 12.9 pounds per cow for 64, making an average of 273.4 pounds per cow to date (Nov. 21). I think it is fair to assume that from now till Jan. 1 would, if the herd was kept together, bring up the average to 300 pounds per cow for 1895. You will, of course, readily see that if we were to wait till the last cow fresh had milked till almost due again, and figured each cow for a full year, the average would have been considerably higher.

These 71 cows had ten acres of pasture, were fed green rye, oats and peas, oats in the milk, green corn fodder, ensilage and corn stover, with an average four quarts twice daily of a mixture of 300 pounds of bran with 100 pounds cottonseed meal, equal to a little less than eight pounds per day at the height of full feed.

While I know there are many who are doing better than this, for the benefit of those who do not do as well and don't know how it can be done, you may have my formula. First, weigh each milking of every cow every day and keep the record before the milkers that daily comparisons of yield can be made. Feed each cow only what she is eager for of fodder and will eat up clean, and just what grain is required to keep her at her best, if her best will pay for the food she gets. To illustrate: Several times during the period covered I have reduced the total quantity of grain fed by taking away from cows gaining flesh a quarter, a half, and, within a month, the entire grain ration from individual cows, dividing the grain so taken, or a portion of it, rather, among such cows as remained thin and who responded to increased feed with the result every time of an increased milk return with a decreased cost for grain.

The total yield of milk each day must be carefully compared with previous days and a tabulated record kept where every day's yield of milk for a month can be scanned in a moment and the drift of the herd seen readily.

The Babcock test has been used freely, several tests having been made of each cow's milk.

Let me say, merely to emphasize the value of systematic knowledge of what each cow is doing and can be made to do, that these cows were purchased out of ordinary farm herds, one, two, three and four in a piece, and the most claimed for any herd from which purchases were made was in three instances that the herd had averaged 220 pounds of butter per cow last year. Yet a herd of 71 cows was picked up here and there of ordinary farmers, which in response to systematic watching, feeding and milking, by ordinary farmhands, pushed and stimulated to best efforts by resultant figures stating them in the face twice daily, have yielded in 10 2-3 months an average of 273.4 pounds of butter per cow.—George T. Van Norman in Board's Dairyman.

Needs Brains.

Dairying is properly regarded as one of the highest grades of farming. It requires brains rather than brawn. The more thoroughly the business is studied the better it pays. This industry has an elevating influence upon those engaged in it. In every successful dairying district in this or any other country may be found unmistakable evidences of intelligence, thrift, comfort and prosperity.—Major Alvord.

Raise all the feed you can for your cows at home on your own ground. In that way you get good money for the crops themselves.

The secret of a speedy cure in stomach ills is selecting the proper remedy and this is difficult to do unless one is sure what the disease is. But one thing is sure, had the liver been actively at work sickness could not have come. It is then always safe to take Simmons Liver Regulator which keeps the liver well regulated and all poisons expelled from the system.
