A SINISTER'S DILEMMA.

According to a New England paper, the pastor of a Congregational church at Hartford, Vermont, is required not only to preach the gospel of the Bible, as he understands it, on Sunday, but also to practice the temporal gospel according to the McKinley tariff on week days. The latest incumbent of the pulpit aforesaid is unanimous to have given excellent satisfaction in all his Sabbath day exhortations and homilies; he carried no politics into his discourses, and although he took the office in answer to an advertisement calling for a pastor who was "young, married and a Republican," he managed to please all who sat at his feet, including Democrats, Populists and A. P. A's. It has gradually leaked out, however, through inquiries instituted by a woolen manufacturer of the town, that the preacher voted for Cleveland in 1892. The result is that a large faction refuse to contribute to his salary, and others who accuse him of hypocrisy or falsehood have quitted his shepherd until he shall be relieved from its charge. There is to be no coercion or compulsion employed to effect his retirement, but his congregation has dwindled perceptibly in numbers, and he is in a fair way of being "starved out."

We refer to the incident not so much to show that the phrase "church and state" furnishes a text for political discussion in many places besides Utah, as to suggest that a man who is hired to preach cannot very well complain if compelled to preach what his masters pay him for. One who "divines for money" is understood to make his theology and his oratory acceptable to his employers. Unless of great influence and reputation, he dare not, for he cannot afford to, say unpopular things to them or in any way excite their displeasure. Hence the anteriority of the modern pulpit, except in rare cases; hence the barrenness, the lack of vigor and spirit, the sound and tinkle instead of the fire and force, of so-called Christianity as preached in the sectarian world today. Yet the incident as narrated is unpleasant in its illiberality. While the Vermont deacons have a right to demand conformity and truth as to the qualifications of any hired man they choose to advertise for, and may think themselves deceived by the latest one employed, it seems unduly severe to begin punishing him now for a vote cast three years ago, and which in all humility he may have long since repented of.

MODERN SYRIA.

A native of Syria, Shehadi, Abdulla Shehadi, is at present touring in the United States on the historic and social differences of the inhabitants of that part of the Turkish empire. He is a graduate of the American college at Beirut and came to be well versed in the subjects of his lecture.

He thinks the Christians of Syria are the descendants chiefly of the ancient Phoenicians, though the country has been overrun so often by other races that there is a considerable admixture of blood. The Hittites, Amalekites and other nations existing at the time of the conquest of the Israelites under Joshua are also represented among the people. The Mohammedan population are of Arabian descent, and there is besides a large portion of Jewish ancestry.

The language has been the Arabian from the time the followers of Mohammed entered the country, about 1,300 years ago. None of the ancient languages survive as a spoken tongue.

The Turkish government, the lecturer says, is very oppressive, but as the people are too weak to resist, the oppression continues. According to Mr. Shehadi's representations of the condition, both Christians and Mohammedans feel the heavy hand of their conquerors. About thirty years ago they agreed in unity in an effort to gain their independence, and the Sultan of the desert promised to furnish 10,000 horses to the new state. But the plan was betrayed to the government by a Greek and matured, and the result was that everyone known to have taken part in the plot was seized and executed.

The estimated population of Syria is about 1,000,000 souls. This fact itself is a severe criticism on the present government methods. Palestine which is but a small part of the present Syria, at the time of its greatest age had a population of probably 3,000,000 souls, and there is no considerable reason why the whole Syria today should not contain many times that number.

The Syrians, like the Armenians, it appears, hope for the intervention in their behalf of the Christian powers of Europe. The trouble, however, is that the European countries no longer go to the strike expense power for the sake of a mere principle. Still, it is believed on all hands, that these ministerial remedies have a bright future before them, and that their duration will be brought about when the time is ripe for the change the Christian people in Syria so much desire.

SUSCEPTIBILITY TO WEATHER.

Investigations on the effect of the weather on man's physical and mental condition, and on the various avocations of human beings never seem very interesting people. In an article in Popular Science Monthly, on subject is briefly discussed:

Who has not felt the difference between a depressing and an enlivening day? Sydney Smith wrote: "Every high and very low temperature subdues all human sympathy and relations. It is impossible to feel affection where the thermometer is below 20 degrees." Dr. Farr and Dr. Mann almost laid down their especially to registered on the thermometer, so anxious were they to measure certain kinds of criminality. On months the effects of the weather 200 and 300 miles. Nearly all conditions are affected by weather. Men of science are often as much subject to weather as ordinary people who are most have the weather for their bread, character of work. If one will read poor scientific work he will be surprised to find how many weather marks are scattered through it. Disease is rather more may be one cause of so much diversity and even disagreement in through processes recently regarded as scientific. Many experienced teachers think these events be mentioned and so weather work and disappear in conformity with the weather. The head of a factory employing 3,000 workmen has said: "We reckon that a disagreeable day yields about 10 per cent less work than a delightful day, and we thus have to count the days lighter in our pouch and lose accordingly." These are some of the ideas put forth in a preliminary statement by J. S. Lemon, who proposes to publish more at length upon the subject. "Unless any investigation of the subject," he says, "there is no reason for attempt at distinguishing results of weather changes from similar waves otherwise caused. This difficulty is no greater than in many other spaces of research, and, we believe, will not invalidate our methods and results."

There are, then, it would seem, several causes why suicide during the regions where the weather conditions are unfavorable, either through an excess of heat or cold, or of too much humidity, so and the above a certain level. It is, apparently, a natural result of the law of cause and effect that people in a climate like that of Utah, for instance, should be capable of the highest mental and physical development.

"CUTTERS" AND THEIR GUNS.

A school has just been established in New York to teach policemen "how to shoot." It is said to be well patronized by a policeman who says which he doesn't know how to use is a dangerous element in the community. But the knotty point of "how to shoot" does not consist merely in the ability to pull the trigger of a cocked and leaden weapon. To be really useful, the art of shooting requires skill enough to hit the object desired, and it also requires, above all else, the judgment to know when to begin shooting. Unfortunately children shall waste from the bullets fired by exalted policemen at most days, and until safe officers shall learn that the theft of a cartridge from a citizen's barrel does not warrant opening fire upon the fleeing thief, no community is safe from the would-be guardians of its peace. By all means have the policemen taught how to shoot, but lay special stress in each lesson on the more important part that hardly any policeman in all his lifetime will need to use at all the knowledge thus acquired.

A COMMENTARY of the New York Evening Sun says an earthquake and cyclone taking place in Japan at the same time has been disastrous. It consists of the simple act of walking backward. The reason why such a process should have the effect claimed for it is said to be that the rolling action of the body brings about a reflex action of the brain, and thus drives away the pain that when induced by curvaceous is the result of too much going forward. The minutes is warranted to have the desired effect, but generally relief comes much sooner. The Sun concludes: "You should walk very slowly, letting the ball of your feet touch the floor first and then the heel; but the way, in fact, one should, in theory, walk forward, but which in practice, is rarely done. Backwards during serious headache there is no better way to learn to walk well and gracefully forward than the practice of walking backward. A half an hour of it once a day will do wonders toward improving the gait of any woman."

DISPATCHES FROM MEXICO state that the country at present enjoys much prosperity. The country's foreign trade is growing and home manufacture has received an impetus that promises well for the future. Advocates of silver, of course, attribute this prosperity to the fact that the country is on a silver basis, which, they say, stimulates the industry and leads to the establishment of new manufactories, but whether this view is accepted or not, the activity in our sister republic must be regarded as good sign of returning general prosperity. The commerce and industry of one country are so closely interwoven with those of others, that any marked change for the better or the worse in one quarter is sure to be felt nearly all over the world.

NEW YORK, with all its Knickerbocker antiquity, has still some claims to the favor of the really operator. The old clearing house building, which twenty years ago cost about a quarter of a million dollars, has lately been sold for nearly three-quarters of a million. Property when it ripens in value in a couple of decades is not to be sneezed at as an investment.

EVER SINCE they heard of the defeat last saturday of the Cambridge athletes by those from Yale, our esteemed English contemporaries referred to the news of this year's international contests on this side of the Atlantic as "extremely monotonous."
