DESERET EVENING NEWS.

[illegible]

THE PRESIDENT AS AN ORATOR.

Mr. President Cleveland is setting a [illegible] in the cities which [illegible] Washington, with such entertainment of social as [illegible] the idea that the good machinery of the Republic is going to seize hold of very hard work. It is said the visitors will not scatter in good well filled Mardi Gras, when the President will lay down the cares of office and [illegible] to private life. In the meantime [illegible] Chief Executive is going to find it now [illegible] very few interruptions to politics than [illegible] had given it in the two previous campaigns of the White House. [illegible] enough of it, it is said will [illegible] by the time the period being expired. It is said the will not hear of any [illegible] in connection with a third term. If that be true, then those who have been looking to bring his name forward as a candidate for two years [illegible] will cease to waste their efforts in that direction. [illegible] sentiment [illegible] the President's [illegible] will allow him [illegible] to renew his candidacy [illegible] to a certain extent.

It is stated that the book on which Mr. Cleveland is now labouring [illegible] in the time allowed him from official business will deal with economic subjects. Of late years he has devoted much time to the study of political and social economy, and, as might be expected in such a strong character, has very decided views on the subject. These are being [illegible] in paper in the President's own handwriting. Owing to the demands of public life, it takes months to write a chapter, although Mr. Cleveland often works far into the night. It is said that he is making a departure from the usual method of treating his subject, in drawing copiously upon illustrations in American history. The work does not exceed a fortnight's notice to make clear the lines along which he believes progress in economic thought must proceed. It is said that he is presenting economic science from a point of view somewhat in advance of John Stuart Mill. He holds to the wisdom of the Republic [illegible] banking, consumption, [illegible] and exchange—and there is a strong tendency in the direction of [illegible] law, in the theory of benefit of [illegible] which theory does not seem to be [illegible] with him.

The talking has not [illegible] in the letter and manner the chief magistrate has written, but he has [illegible] literary style to [illegible] his views, [illegible] that he views and the point. Opinions [illegible] of expression from those who [illegible] differ with the views. While it is true he [illegible] have certain [illegible] of expression [illegible] official position [illegible] in view that the professors in [illegible] in connection with [illegible] to [illegible] in [illegible] to [illegible] Cleveland would [illegible] This [illegible] Cleveland [illegible] a Democratic [illegible] to the world with [illegible] on taking [illegible] consideration.
