THE MEMORIAL EXERCISE. Rev. Robert Collyer opened the pro-ceedings with prayer. He prayed for the restoration to health of General Sheridap, for the perpetuation of the Union and for the divine guidance of the President.

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, who spoke briefly, said, among other things:
"We of the Grand Army have no sympathy with what is known as the wav-ing of the bloody shirt. We will have none of it. If once a year or oftener it becomes necessary to tell in impas-sioned tones what the civil war was for and what was its outcome, if telling and what was its outcome, if telling what it accomplished may be called waving the bloody shirt, then I say, let the bloody shirt be nailed to the mast."

Miss Rose Coghlan recited "The Charge of the Light Brigade" and Signor Campanini sang "Salve Dinora," from "Faust."

AN ORATION of the evening was delivered by Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll, and was one of those brilliant oratorical efforts for which he is so famous. The peroration was especially fine. It began with that wonderful plece of word painting from his Indianapolis oration, beginning with the words: "The past rises before me like a dream," in which he depicted the war and slavery, the going away of the union volunteers, and the heroes of the war and closing with the

The President expects to return to Washington tonight.

There were 15 divisions of graud army posts. All of them saluted the President. The floral division, which was the last of the procession, contained forty large trucks filled with flowers to be placed on the soldiers' graves in the cemeteries. The absence of Mayor Hewett from the reviewing stand excited much comment among the grapd army men. He says he was not invited but the grand army say he was and that his knowledge of the fact that he has excited their resentment by his treatment kept him away. by his treatment kept him away.
