THE LATE GENERAL CONFERENCE

The sixty-seventh semi-annual Conference of the Church has completed its sessions, and the Saints feel that it has been one of the most important and satisfactory gatherings of the kind that has been held. In the instructions, and admonitions, and action taken by the Church authorities the inspiration of the Almighty has been clearly manifest. The power of God rested abundantly upon the brethren in their addresses to the large congregations, and the Holy Spirit testified to the Saints of the renewal of zeal and activity in the work of the Lord upon the earth. In the blessings then received, all faithful members of the Church are filled with rejoicing.

The instructions given have covered a wide field in the temporal as well as the spiritual life of the Saints; the practical duties of their calling have been impressed upon them in a way to fit existing circumstances; and special admonitions were presented in a tender and forcible manner; all of which cannot fail to be of great benefit to those who received the same and will give heed thereto. The effect of the teachings will be to instill fresh life and vigor into the people and lead them to strive for still better and higher things than they have experienced.

A prominent feature of the Conference instructions was that relating to the authority of God which has been conferred for the accomplishment of His purposes. The Gospel has been restored to earth in this dispensation, preparatory to the second coming of Christ and to inducting in the personal reign of the King of kings; the Lord has organized His Church, and has committed the keys of the kingdom to the duly constituted officers thereof. Those officers have been given the authority of the Most High in all matters, temporal and spiritual, pertaining to His Church, and the full recognition of that authority is an imperative necessity on the part of those who would retain membership in the Church. There is no uncertainty or half-way business about it. It is the divine order which God has commanded to be established among His people, for their guidance and salvation. A chief aim of the Conference instructions has been to impress this fact upon all the members of the Church, that they may fully comprehend the truth and abide thereby.

The principle of faith is so plain and simple that there need be no misconception of it by anyone who enjoys the spirit of intelligence. Where the Almighty has conferred authority in one in His name, those who have received such power are in duty bound to exercise it according to His commandments, and those who have become members of His Church in the manner are obligated to recognize the directions He gives through His servants, each in the calling wherein he is placed, and every quorum in its order. The lesser is not to control the greater, nor is a superior officer to be directed in his duties by one who holds an inferior position. The order of direction is from the Almighty through the highest quorum, and so through the duly constituted channels throughout the Church. It is the beautiful, perfect order of each standing in his own place, his agency unremoved, and the rights of his neighbor being guarded from infringement, free from nagging criticism of unlegislated communication, whether he be officer or member.

In all matters the counsel given was most timely, and as each will be received by the Saints, who recognize therein the fact that the Church is progressing in the fulfillment of its high destiny. Attend in the world the work is extending with a marvelous power; the way is being opened for the Gospel message to be carried to all people. At home its forward movement is fully as rapid, both in labors for the living and for the dead. And to the Church she all the authority, force, inclination and the instruction required for the Gospel plan in its progressive character is unfolding out and taking meaning from effort and experience. This is clearly shown in the proceedings of the October Conference, where the Church collectively spoke and acted in that divine power manifested upon those to perform a good and responsible work at duly constituted Apostles of the Lord Jesus, in which inferior faithful Saints are called to continue in perfect unity and love, union and faith.

THE BALLOT LAW.

The convenience and inconvenience of the Australian ballot law are being discussed with more earnestness on the day of election approaches, and in our Press department is a statement of the objections which are raised there. Those objections are based upon the view that the old system of scanning tickets so as to locate the preferable public. It must be remembered, however, that the arrangement of tickets as there suggested would not be an improvement in enabling the voter to ascertain more easily than now the politics of candidates; experience elsewhere has shown a contrary effect. Under the law as it now is, if a voter wants a straight ticket, a mark on the party emblem designates that choice, as easy in the present arrangement as in the other. Where a voter intends to make one change from a straight ticket he must mark every candidate voted for, and this is now easily accomplished, with no danger of mistake, when all candidates for one office are under one head with the politics of each specially designated, thus when the voter has to jump from a column to column to pick out names and offices. Thus far, reports from states that have the present arrangement are more satisfactory than others, and show that the voter does not find the new ballot much of a puzzle. It is well, however, to discuss and weigh all objections, with a view to making any improvement which may aid the electors in expressing their will at the ballot box.

SIN OF IRREGULARITY.

The Medical Record of September 26 contains an article on the penalty of irregular feeding, which contains suggestions of much practical value. It commences by stating that the American people, notwithstanding their just claim to high civilization, in some of their routine customs are only slightly above the level of barbarians. In proof of this, so many, startling assertion, it is pointed out that there is a widespread habit on Sundays to the late and live high, thus deviating from the established everyday rule, the penalty of which many persons pay with indigestion and various gastric disorders. "The barbarian gormandizes today and feels tomorrow without such disorders. We will exemplify," the Record says, "our hereditary traits by imitating him one day of the week, but unfortunately we have not maintained the barbarian standard of excellence in gastric digestion."

Regularity in eating and sleeping is a fundamental essential to good health. The reason of this is that the digestive secretions are poured out with the regularity of clockwork, so that a man can tell by his feelings almost the minute at which his dinner hour comes. When this regularity is violated, the violator, according to the Medical Record, sustains an actual injury to the digestive apparatus which requires both a definite amount of work to perform and absolute regularity in its performance. A gormand is certain to meet retribution. A drunkard who stimulates his nervous membranes with alcohol finds punishment for his abuse of nature. Equally certain are the results of indiscretions with regard to irregularity in eating. The organs whose function is to digest the food will pour out their secretions at the customary time and then again absorb them. The result is what a few experiments of this kind that the secretions become less in amount and activity, and disorders of various kinds are the consequences.

The journal mentioned says:

"This invitation to gastric disorders is spread every seventh day by nineteen-twenty per cent of the people of this country, there is seven days, counts our accredited day of "rest"—one day on which the three regular meals at morning, noon and night are replaced by a vicious system of late rising and late feeding, followed by gluttony. The gastric secretions know nothing of a seventh day of rest. They are ready at the customary time for an early morning breakfast, but find none. Hence to them and they are subjected to a second period of the day, commencing the same process is repeated, with the additional injury that instead of an early hour after the previous meal, the stomach is crowded unusually full of food, whose thickness and quantity is quite beyond the ability of the digestive tunnel afternoon discomfort of overeating, with the accompanying absence of appetite for the evening meal. What wonder that the following day is "Blue Monday."

The human body is a wonderful machine and the Creator has certainly placed great confidence in His children in so far as He has entrusted it to their care. Nobody can neglect to study the conditions of its well-being without rendering a most sacred trust.

MR. HARVEY'S "BREAK."

The disgraceful action of Yale college students at a meeting that was being addressed by Wm. J. Bryan is still fresh in the public mind, and will be remembered long as a marked evidence of the ignorance and dastardly instincts of a class of persons who are expected to give some evidence of manhood, consistency and broadmindedness, because of their educational advantages. Perhaps the setting they received from the press will have the effect on the college professors to cause them to instill ideas of liberality into such of their pupils as have not been sufficiently educated in that line.

Now comes a statement regarding W. H. Harvey, author of "Coin." He is credited with referring, in a speech at Chariton, Iowa, Tuesday evening, to veteran generals of the Union army as "old wrecks of the Rebellion, who have lost their honor and patriotism, and are tools of political Shylocks." If Mr. Harvey used such language he was deservedly greeted with hisses and cries of "shame." There is no justification in political debate for such references to Union generals, no matter what their views on the great issue of today. The veterans have as much right to be one side of the political contest as any one else has to be on the other, and their past record shows them to be sincere in their advocacy, wrong or not they are mistaken in the policy they uphold, and therefore they are entitled to courteous treatment. In any event, there was no occasion to sling the record of an honorable soldier into a political campaign by contemptible personal remarks.

These incidents show how a cause may be readily injured by dignity or indiscretion on the part of its friends. The Yale college incident worked more injury to Mr. Bryan's opponent than to the free-silver cause, and Mr. Harvey's extremely insane talk will not help the side he is advocating. There are some people, and not all in them school children, who might be given benefit is being muzzled until they can avoid intemperate and discourteous language in their address.

NINE MONTHS' FAILURES.

Bradstreet's notes that the total number of failures of firms, corporations and individuals in commercial, financial and industrial lines in the United States during the past nine months is 11,280, the largest aggregate for a like period since records of this character have been compiled, the next larger total having been in the corresponding portion of 1895, 11,140, five months of which were marked by panic. The New England states show a smaller increase in number of failures than any other section. The western states are credited with the heaviest increase, and are followed in order by the southern states, Pacific coast states, territories, and northwestern states. In this report Utah is classed in the territories. The aggregate of liabilities in 1896 is $171,555,292, as compared with $227,275,168 in 1895, and the assets $89,015,165 in 1896 to $127,978,291 in 1895, the proportion of assets in 1895 is 56 per cent, while in 1896 it was 52 per cent of the liabilities. In Utah, however, the failures for the nine months of 1896 were only 65, as compared with 81 for a like period in 1895.

WOMEN AT ELECTIONS.

The eastern papers are saying that "the women already have demonstrated that they are to be a powerful factor in this campaign," and point to the states of Wyoming, Colorado and Utah, where they have the franchise, and in other states in which women's clubs are working in the interest of their respective parties. It is notable that in those commonwealths women at elections there is a general concession that the greater proportion of the fair sex, where they exercise the elective franchise, will throw their force in favor of candidates of high moral character rather than on the lines of partisanship. One class views this as evidence that women do not reason on party principles and therefore should not be given the suffrage; while another sees in the same fact a proof that women will maintain good government by supporting candidates best qualified to promote that end.

In this State there is little doubt that the bulk of the women vote will be cast for men whose integrity has given them high standing in the community, as against political tricksters and persons of unsavory reputation. This feature will make that vote of special importance in localities where scientious officials have had greatest sway. It may be added, however, that the women vote will not cut near as much of a figure in this State as it might have done, in consequence of so many refusing to register, and in view of the further fact that many women have registered will not vote. If has been claimed that not more than half the women qualified to vote in this State will go to the polls, but that those who do so will vote in favor of a stable, economical government by an intelligent union of political twaddle and excitement will not swerve them from high purpose. But as time goes on, and the atmosphere of voting wears away and women come to realize their power to behalf of better laws and methods in administering public affairs, the proportion to set sisters will not fall far short of that cast by the men.
