SOME WORTHY WIVES

WOMEN WHO HAVE BEEN OF HELP TO THEIR HUSBANDS.

Marriage Sometimes Pays as an Investment—The Requirements of Wifehood—Women as an Adviser and Counselor as Well as a Companion.

There has been hysterical and protracted lament of marriage as a failure, sometimes expression of marriage as a luxury and yet the exception of marriage as an equal partnership in the business. But for some unpublished marriage in the light of a investment to the power and ambition it gives in the history, social or political world?

Take the old system the perfect helpmate was the married housekeeper—she who "staid well to the ways of her household" and was also in the science of good cooking. Here, in corresponding poetry and prose, we have a sample. Under the new dispensation the money man whose complaint is much over intelligently into the home interests of his life, the politician who assigned to not slightingly in the interest of his political allies and expects his wife to take whom with outside the man with original genius, the literary, the philosopher in the world and surely with the man from the man whose choice of wives has been wise.

If she a man of sound artistic intelligence, according to the woman's side, who said: "Let me it is safe to say every public man of prominence owes his position largely to a woman, and he his wife. There are exceptions, of course, which will occur in every age, but never before was the role, height, stature, self, influence, they are only perform all their own duties, but her superior correspondence, collect all bills and information, draft and review speeches, and even when their industry is of a purely domestic character its influence is simply incalculable." And this man, whom now the role is worn with a sacrifice in a Lincoln, as a war as Alexander, as President, is generous enough to believe and gallant enough to say that Martha Washington is as worthy of a monument as the immortal George of his mother.

Women is beginning to realize that there has not yet a crown of crown or tiara on its head, or the robes of philosophy, statesmanship or literature, and yet have been other crowns, which may not be of gold or silver or its resemblance of no doubt will be in time to the base of her crown. For that we may be called upon to stand and defend it in the defense of her sex, the working ring is forged. Of Josephine, the obscure and unpolished soldier lover who rather than one city demanded as a ransom the most grandiose to wear right with the emperor's crown. Of the infamous Jane Wade, Cecilia, the queen, which demanded western territory in his service as he is engaged, and how much of it is brilliancy of his work is due to her influence in keeping or maintaining the base the almost unknown and of the highway, or in projecting the fuel lines bringing to Hindustan, the world will never know.

In its influence, the wealth and the [illegible] interest of the wife the great [illegible] of Frederick the Great of Prussia, [illegible] of India acknowledged that his [illegible] was largely due, and in [illegible] Napoleon, who asked him [illegible] to a wife [illegible] "A living [illegible] to your [illegible] of our wife." Very early [illegible] the great man he may be [illegible] before he [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] of the Great City. Men, where he [illegible] the [illegible] would even [illegible] for [illegible] to relation [illegible] the [illegible] or [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] of those who are [illegible] and [illegible] to the [illegible] not only to [illegible] of companionship, but the most [illegible] of advisers, but for whom all [illegible] of the service of her husband [illegible] his public work [illegible] have been severely felt and felt [illegible].
