EVENING NEWS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IDAHO TERRITORY, July, 23rd, 1885.

Editor Deseret News:

Evidence still accumulates to substantiate the fact that prosecution and persecution are synonymous, which, perhaps, those who languish in the felon's cell will readily admit; nor would they query as to the propriety of placing the stars and stripes at half mast, when they stand consciously acquitted and just as much entitled to that liberty guaranteed in the constitution, as any one else in the land. The would-be loyal and ex-Confederate patriots would do well to consider the saying, that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones. Their great exhibition of patriotism, as the skilled miner would say of some of his excavations, are of rather low grade, and too worthless for manipulation.

F. A. Brown's speech is commented on by some of the citizens, and he is compared to Patrick Henry, the great and intuitive orator; but it seems that the honorable (?) Judge did not diminish from the full penalty allowed by the law. Able pleas and extenuating circumstances fail to counteract the pre-existing sentiment against men on account of their religious convictions, in a government once so free [illegible]

WEDDING FESTIVAL.

SALT LAKE CITY, July 27, 1885.

Editor Deseret News:

We had the pleasure of attending a wedding reception at Farmington, Davis County, on the 24th inst., Pioneer Day. Wilford W. Clark, son of Ezra T. Clark and Mary Stevenson Clark, of Farmington, was the happy groom, and the fair bride was Mrs. Milla Dunn, of Bennington, Bear Lake. They were joined in wedlock at Logan, on their way down to Farmington, on the 20th inst., and it was a surprise to most of the company. Two long tables well supplied with the fruits of the season, and twice surrounded by merry friends. A peculiar feature of the affair was that neither tea nor coffee was to be seen upon the tables, but sparkling glasses of clear mountain water added to the beauty of the scene. During the evening remarks were made by Bishop Secrist, and Elder E. Stevenson, which together with music and singing, recitations and refreshments, including ice cream, helped to make the evening pass off very enjoyably.

Mary S. Clark is the worthy mother of ten sons and one daughter, all married but one son—the youngest.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Destructive Fire. Crop Prospects, etc.

WASHINGTON, Washington County, Utah, July 25, 1885.

Editor Deseret News:

The quiet repose of our peaceful little city was somewhat disturbed on the night of the 23d inst., by the alarm of fire being given. It appears that Sister Barron, relict of the late A. F. Barron, and her daughter, Sister Lufkin, were living in the same house with their families. In consequence of the extreme heat, they slept in the open air. They had all retired to rest, with the exception of one of their sons, who was out on business. He returned about 11:30 p.m., entered the house and took a match from the box to obtain a light, and then, as he supposed, was very careful to extinguish all fire. The supposition now is that a spark of fire must have fallen to the floor unobserved and ignited the carpet. About 1:30 a.m. the fire was first discovered, the flames shooting forth from the windows and doors. All efforts to save any of the effects proved futile, leaving them entirely destitute, with the exception of the clothes they had on when retiring and their bedding.

The sympathies of the people have been fully aroused. Bishop Marcus Funk is proving himself equal to the emergency, and with the assistance of a committee and others, is rendering efficient and present relief.

I also take much pleasure in stating, as a characteristic of this community, that the people need no urging, but are coming forward nobly and liberally to relieve the sufferers in the present calamity.

The celebration of the 24th has passed off peaceably.

The general health of the people is pretty good, still they feel most sensibly the fatiguing effects of the extreme hot weather, the thermometer registering as high as 106 in the shade.

Our grain crop is very fair; the hay yield will be immense; peaches and grapes a pretty fair crop. The times are exceedingly dull; the demand is not equal to the amount of products of the garden and orchard this part of the Territory is capable of putting into the market.

I will further add that we are greatly blessed as a ward in not having to contend with apostate and corrupting Gentile influences.

ROBT. G. GOULD.

BY THE WAY.

SANPETE, July 23, 1885.

Editor Deseret News:

OF DRUMMERS.

As we journey up and down this southern part of the Territory, we run against the heavily-loaded sample wagon of Z. C. M. I. and other reliable firms, and it has passed into a proverb that with certain houses in Salt Lake it is safe to do business. The inexperienced buyer may safely trust his purchases with them.

In most instances these drummers are your friends—brothers, and if by thrift they have lifted themselves above mediocrity they do not forget the hand that fattened them.

It was a grave question with me whether the purpose to paint Salt Lake red on the 4th was not a put up job by a house of enamel paint fame, Brush & Co. This firm has its drummer, and none more persistently "brothers" you and shakes hand cheerily and head dolefully at the "horrid persecution" when among "Mormons."

Are there not houses that are legitimate dealers in all the grades of merchandise with whom we might deal, or is it necessary to give our orders to a firm the members of which have proven themselves capable of such duplicity and their willingness to join hands with the worst enemies of the people.

OF STORES AND MILLS.

In some of our towns we are stored and milled to death. Some towns have five stores, three flour mills two or three furniture shops, till bankruptcy stares some in the face.

It is possible, if the true science of co-operation was carried out that one store or one mill might supply the wants of a small community, but eagerness for large dividends, nepotism, etc., etc., have so obliterated the idea of "the people" by "the people" and "for the people," that the cry of a needed opposition found a lodgment among the people and a division of trade followed. Opposition is not the life of trade; it is more frequently its death. Concentration of capital and tact is needed. A wisely conducted co-operative store can by its figures, close attention to business, and keenness to hunt up the avenues of trade, make it impossible for any one to succeed but "our store;" but it must be "our store" in every feature. The lack of these elements have given room for too many of one kind. In many instances we have forced the increase of mills and stores. Store business to be a success, like the government, must be of, for and by the people.

MORE ANON.

ON THE DEATH OF GENERAL GRANT.

"Death, thou art infinite—'tis life is little."

Our flag is floating in the breeze half-mast, with flowing crape attached to it. The ex-President of the United States, has passed to the common bourne "whence no traveler returns." Our spirits, as a people, are in unison with that semblance of mourning, for we are suffering persecution and woe. Our very children are mourning for their absent fathers, thrown into prison for a principle of their religion; hence it has for us a speaking application, and seems to acknowledge the cloud that is hovering over our otherwise beautiful atmosphere.

We are prepared to mourn. The heart's deep fountain is full, and, therefore, is easily broken up, and tears fall readily. My tears have fallen as I read the last scenes of the mighty dead. America's great chieftain and renowned warrior, the earthly savior of his country, as his warlike achievements testify; hence, the half-mast colors of our country this day in silent eloquence proclaim his loss. He was one of those deep souls whose lives are absorbed in thinking. Silence was his motto, when he spoke it was to command obedience to the plans he had concocted, which were framed to win.

In life, he was applauded and appreciated—not always the meed of the great. This was amply tested when on his circumnavigating trip; everywhere he received a royal welcome. Royal salutes announced the arrival of his vessel in the nations' harbors. England was especially prominent in these royal demonstrations. When entering Buckingham Palace the sovereign laid aside the severe etiquette of centuries, and met him in the vestibule at "the top of the stairs," and, herself, escorted him to the seat of honor prepared for him. Henri Quarre or Charlemagne could have received no greater national honor—and as a brother sovereign he was entertained throughout the visit. Even his daughter, of eighteen only—when she chose to visit England, shone by reflection from her mighty sire, and she also was received by a royal salute as soon as she entered the national harbor as one born in the purple and draped with royal ermine. During her visit in England she was also received with due honors at the Queen's drawing-rooms. Perhaps an American can scarcely realize how very distingue all this is in the appreciation of the English. And perhaps they can; for I believe the grand old country is pretty well understood in this enlightened 19th century. These honors were tendered to the daughter of the man England delighted to honor. Some may curl the lip at all this, but none will who have ever experienced it, for it is always given in so grand, so noble, and so genial a manner, that I should pity the heart and brain that were not ignited by it with all the understanding, and appreciation they were capable of.

Death, that grand leveller of all has now done his work upon our ex-President. Tears have been shed for the sufferings of Mrs. Lincoln; he has had the sympathy of nations and of their crowned heads; for the good and the noble among them (and they are not a few) realize more than is generally believed—how frail is the tenure by which they hold their eminence; and that at the termination of their longest reign, death and the grave await them equally with the humblest of their subjects.

The last words of Charles the First to his young son, a few hours before his sad death, constitute a short sermon that ought to be written in gold; also those of James 2nd, the exiled King of England. Yes, indeed, even among crowned heads we find the grandeur and the nobility of the Christian. The thoughtless mind looks upon their exalted position, with envy and repining, and often with doubt as to the justice of the "King of Kings"—not considering that with all their grand surroundings, they also must find happiness within their own bosoms or they can never possess it. The grandeur and the greatness of the world cannot give it. History shows what martyrs many of them have been, and often we read how nobly they endured.

God is just, and one day this will be demonstrated to all.

But I lift up my eyes and see the half-mast colors with their mournful accompaniment and my thoughts run back to my starting point. The American chieftain "sleeps well, after life's fitful fever is ended." If he has earned a crown, he will assuredly wear one eternally, and that he may attain to that and all its appendages, is the heartfelt prayer of one who is a unit in the family of God.
