THIRD DAY'S CONFERENCE.

established in our midst. If we needed manufactures we knew how to produce those which were manufactured at home, and never spend a dollar from this time forth for articles of foreign manufacture, if the same kind of goods were made and could be obtained at home, even if it cost a little more but to be just for them. Home industries are only found work for our people, and kept money within our own community which would otherwise go elsewhere. The speaker made reference to the Logan Temple. Some of our brethren, he said, who were engaged in the promotion of that enterprise were greatly under the weight of responsibility resting upon them in the establishment of the undertaking; and the trouble that they would receive humiliation and the lowest support which it deserved. Referring to what he had seen of the good throughout Utah, including Logan, which Brother Smith said had proved to be one of the greatest temporal blessings ever established in this Territory, he felt prevented the making of "Gentiles" and the people from being taken advantage of. In conclusion he said President Young, whose time was that the people themselves should care it and so become independent of all so called. The advantages of co-operative institutions were pointed out. Today, the speaker said, Mr. M. I. Wilcken is one of the most valuable and reliable institutions in the land.

President Smith also advocated the establishment of creameries in our midst. That which he was preaching, he remarked, was the gospel—temporal salvation, the gospel of economy, sense and reason, the Gospel of truth, and he was glad to be with the Latter-day Saints might to observe and honor. We ought to have been converted to this years ago, and saved the terrible crisis which had have resulted from it, instead of, as we do today, sending our money out of the country, to be a continual stream, to the ruin of hundreds of thousands of dollars for that which could be produced at home just as well as abroad.

The Saints were earnestly admonished to keep strictly the Word of Wisdom, and abstain from the use of tea, coffee, strong drinks, and avoid the use of tobacco.

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON added a few closing words, bearing his testimony to the exemplary teaching of President Joseph F. Smith in the matter of observing the Word of Wisdom.

The choir sang, "Light and Truth, the World is Waking."

Benediction by Bishop Elias Morris.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Singing by the choir and congregation:

How let us rejoice in the day of salvation,
To repent, to reform, to call God's service,
Good things are coming to us and our nation,
And shortly the hour of redemption will come.

Prayer by Elder Elias Blackburn.

How was a hymn, composed by sister of the Saints, to hold her your time to sing received work, was sung by the choir and congregation.

ANGUS LORENZO ANDY

said, in substance, that he had been very much edified and instructed by what had been spoken during this Conference. The Saints had received that kind of information, and counsel which every Latter-day Saint needed, and which should be put into practice in our future daily life. The exhaustion of the metals in these mountain valleys from the various mines of the water was truly a marvel, and we should be the most thankful people of any on the face of the globe, seeing the promises which God had made with them, who remained faithful to the cause. The roads of spiritual darkness which hung over our heads before we entered the true kingdom, compared with the enjoyments of the Holy Spirit, and our reward would be something to our faithfulness. The Church and Kingdom, from the day it was organized sixty-two years ago, had never swerved and continued to grow close to the Sun, of the most powerful obstacles and difficulties. He had no doubt or misgiving as to the future of this work, for it was the Lord's.

The Latter-day Saints might have been guilty of errors in the past, but if they were honest, as we feel, they would be sustained in making their sacrifices. The Spirit of the Lord was with the Latter-day Saints to guide them aright, and would remain with them if they were humble and faithful as Latter-day Saints should be.

The speaker next adverted to the obligations resting upon parentage in the training of their children, and urged them to set the young a good example in all things. Everything that was desirable for us in life has been secured by the plan of salvation which was as a people had received. Let us keep all the commandments which God has given unto us, no matter how great the sacrifice might be.

In conclusion Brother Snow touched upon the subject of temple building, and expressed the hope that all their utmost towards helping to complete the Salt Lake Temple by April next. In that holy building, if we properly prepared ourselves to enter there, we should witness most extraordinary manifestations from Deity—such as had not been seen by any other people for many thousands of years. It would be a fitting climax after the trials through which this people had passed during the last fifty years, if we were not in a fit condition to receive those great manifestations of the goodness and power of God when the time should come.

BISHOP JOHN R. WINDER

reminded the Latter-day Saints of their pledge made by resolution at the last April Conference to have the Salt Lake Temple finished a year from that date. The committee were making good progress with the building, and it would be ready for dedication on April 6th, 1893. Between 200 and 300 men were now employed upon it, and the money contributed by the Saints was being carefully expended. There was no better mechanics to be found, and certainly none more faithful in the discharge of their duties, than those to whom the work has been entrusted. Having made a careful estimate of the cost, he found that it would require $150,000 to complete the structure. The work now being done was of a costly character, but when finished it would be most beautiful for the Saints to look upon. He trusted that the hearts of the people would be opened and that they would respond liberally to the cause in hand.

PRESIDENT GEORGE Q. CANNON spoke next. Following a vote of thanks to the speakers, he said that the report made by Bishop Winder regarding the progress made in completing the Temple to date was one to be very gratifying to all Saints. The structure would not be entirely completed by the time named, but would be sufficiently advanced in order to its being dedicated and work taken down in it at the time fixed for which it is designed. It would be further decorated and beautified subsequently. The amount of money Bishop Winder is now needed to complete the work to be done by the 6th of April next might seem large, but when divided up among the people such as we were it was comparatively small. Through faith men had accomplished great mighty things, and the work in the future would be carried forward to success. The building of the Temple at Kirtland, which the Lord commanded to erect with His promises, was much greater undertaking than the one now being carried on by us, as the people in those days were comparatively few and destitute. A liberal fund we were called upon to raise, but great things, and we should be so Latter-day saints were judged by and Father in Heaven would bless us. He referred to the subject of faith in speaker instances that displayed among the Elders who had gone out to preach and had taken without purse or scrip. The Lord had always been with them, and even when tested and tribulation had come upon them, He had stood by them in their behalf.

The labor of completing this temple rested upon us as a people, and if we would only go to work with our hearts and hands, and with faith and determination to accomplish the object, success would crown our efforts. There were no difficulties which we had great reason to hope for our God, in order to show our appreciation of what He had done for us. Temple work for the salvation and dead was a blessing conferred upon this people. He then spoke on the doctrine of extending the principles of salvation to the dead as well as the living, and quoted from the scriptures in support of the position taken by the Latter-day Saints on this subject. He showed with great clearness that the plan of redemption was intended for all—not only those who heard and embraced it in this life, but that it was carried to the other side of the veil. The ordinances conferred will be then administered in their behalf, by those representing the dead in this life, in accordance with the revelations of the work in which the Latter-day Saints were engaged. Brother Cannon went on to enlarge upon this point, giving many striking thoughts and evidences of its beauty and efficacy.

Satan had determined to bring to naught the plan of salvation and to destroy this work of God if it were possible. Hence the trials and persecutions which the Saints had had to contend with in at every step taken from the beginning, and which had been the means of shedding some of the best blood of the present century. The trials we had passed through already would beset us in the future, but we could rejoice that we had the progress of this great latter-day work, for God had spoken concerning it.

Nothing happened to this people without God had foreordained it. He understood it and had a purpose in calling us to pass through tribulation, and the object would be made known unto us in the own due time. None of us were severed from the kingdom, and the plan of salvation was so great that it embraced the whole universe. God had blessed this people with many and great favors, and who would exchange his or our lot for anything the world could afford?

In closing his remarks President Cannon brought the Saints to do all in their power to help towards completing the Salt Lake Temple, so that when the 6th of April, 1893, dawned no debts would remain to embarrass us, the Saints dedicated it, and then the building would be sacrificial as it would be, and prove acceptable to our God and our Heavenly Father. The Holy Spirit would manifest itself upon every one who took hold of a part in this noble work.

The foregoing synopsis is necessarily a meagre one, and only gives a faint idea of the Bishop's excellent and instructive discourse.

The choir sang the anthem,

How lovely are the messengers,

Benediction by Apostle Heber J. Grant.

DRAWING TO A CLOSE.

The Attractions at the Fair This Afternoon and Evening.

The grand attraction at the Fair this afternoon was the exhibition of "Utah's best son," gleaned for the occasion of the baby show. For the prizes there were 120 entries. The ride was then the most helpless were to be picked out in the main building, but when the time came there were so many competing that it was decided to go to the grand stand and even then there was hardly room to accommodate the throng. At that address, when the reporter left the building, he had been unable to get the name of the wheelers, there being so many anxious mothers waiting to receive the news, each of course entertaining to be the superior mother of the prize, who, after looking themselves up for a wonderful world, and after it was got ready started for the show, Mr. Edward Bergner, or any other gave that it a shove or more tender growth, and to the protecting bosom of the sister to be given and thrive. After the Kentucky press a well found it and "our" claim and all other claims. You can get a good look at this gem when it is rolled for it in the other way, according to A. J. Rust, in Gleanings.

There were so many people on the grounds this afternoon as there has been any day since the Fair opened. It is plain to see that the people are pleased and the people were still coming.

The attractions for this evening will be the Illuminated Fairies' Incantation, a Fairy by Professor Lamoreux, which will receive attention from all the pages, and the Illuminating Gondola by Chief Shannon, to be given twice at 8.30 o'clock, which is sure to be a grand success.

PRESS VIEWS.

Some careful experiments have been made by eminent chemists, and proved by the result that the result indicating an almost perfect facility in the result with the disease known as syphilis and it is supposed to be incurable. Some experts may be used for real power, as for the treatment of syphilis. A letter of complete health may result in the application of a few bottles of Swift's Specific and eight bottles of the Specific, which is well known and popular. Some time to be proved by the plant will do well to consider this new Medicine, in the Monthly.
