which the shooting occurred, I went home to my room at 132 West South Temple street, ate supper and then went to the house of Mr. Philo Adams, who treated the prisoner at the Globe block. After Mr. Adams had got his supper, somewhere near 8 o'clock, I accompanied him to the Globe block and stayed there with Mr. Adams till between 9 and 9 o'clock that night. Then I went home to the Knutsford and then went to Main street along Third South and on Main street to Gale-Pitts corner and stood there till I heard the city and county clock strike 10, and then went west on First South to West Temple, and I met a man near the Herald office who stopped and talked one by mine. I don't know who the man was, but he seemed to know me. I talked with him to the Knutsford only twenty minutes and then went north of West Temple street to the South Temple street, where I parted. It was then between 10:30 and 11 o'clock.

CALLED HEAVEN TO WITNESS.

"Will you say, positively," asked Mr. Taylor, "that you were not at the house of Mrs. Bleakley between 10 and 11 o'clock on the night of November 1st, 1895?"

"No, sir," answered the prisoner, "positively not; and I call God to witness it!"

The witness continued: The matter I was to Mrs. Bleakley's on that night was the Knutsford hotel. I had previously sold belts to people living east of Mrs. Bleakley's and had passed the latter house several times in the transaction of my business. I was called in by Mrs. Bleakley's two her daughter, who was ill. I called in of my own accord about a week in or to see how the daughter was progressing. I staid there about five minutes, no longer, each time. I never went to Mrs. Bleakley's house on any other occasion.

SEVEN KNEE BIRCHBALLS.

"Did you ever meet Nisbergall, or ever become acquainted with him?" asked Mr. Taylor.

"I never saw him in my life until I saw him at the jail."

FOOTPRINTS EXPLAINED.

About noon on November 22nd, the day of the tragedy, continued Keeler, I loaded the Delivery Park street car and went to State South street, walked past Mrs. Bleakley's to Mrs. Wells's house and back the same way, walking all the way down town. I had on the "particular boots" listed into the trunks by the officers, and my reason for going up that way on that day was that Mrs. Wells had sent word to my room saying that her belt was broken and she desired me to repair it. I didn't know where Mrs. Bleakley stayed prior to or during that time. I ate a night pawnbroker and am usually in bed about 10 or 11 o'clock.

WOULD KISS THE BIBLE.

Describing the circumstances surrounding his arrest, the prisoner continued: I was in bed an hour and a-half when I was aroused by a tremendous rapping on my door and I got up. Mr. Donovan and Mr. Steele came in and Mr. Donovan struck a match and lit the lamp. He said something terrible had happened at Mrs. Bleakley's house, and when I asked him what it was he said a soldier had been shot and I said "That's too bad."

"You knew all about it," said Donovan. "Yes, sir, that's what he said to me and I would kiss the Bible and say so.

Mr. Donovan asked me if I had a gun and I said yes and pulled it out of my valise and handed it to him. One of the officers said the revolver smelled pretty strong of powder. Captain Donovan wanted me to go to the city hall with him and I went. Chief Pratt was the first man to tell me what I was arrested for, on the next morning. I told the officers when they searched me that my revolver had not been on my person for five or six weeks and it was not till I got to the police station that I said anything about when it was last fired. A man who lived on the west side of Jordan river informed it is about a month—now mind—that I had fired my revolver back on November 20th and I found one empty shell since to it. I took a hammer and a nail and drove the shell out and put it in the stove.

FOR DOGS ONLY.

I travel around the country a great deal in my business and I carry the revolver for dogs only but for business I was never attacked by any other in my life before this.

This afternoon Mr. Whitlaw cross-examined the defendant very rigidly, and among other statements the prisoner stated he stood in his cow he weighed 190 pounds.

[This answer will probably be used to—sight to show that Keeler was strong enough to make the seven straight saws in cave taken place in Mrs. Bleakley's house just previous to the shooting.]

ATTORNEY WINTERS.

Attorney C. D. Winters was testifying to the condition of the sidewalk around the Bleakley premises when the News reporter closed.

The Dewjohn Thieves.

George Clarke, alias Fred Brooks, and H. Tremayne, alias Harry Hance, were arraigned for petit larceny and pleaded not guilty. The complaint charges them with stealing demijohns, but as the prosecution had not its witnesses in hand, Conley was discharged while Tremayne was fined $50 for a similar offense committed in July, sentence to which was suspended at the time.

It was brought to some from between the floor and ceiling. The building was believed to be on fire. The fire department was notified. All the students were directed to march from the building with their books and other belongings, which was done without confusion, the students having no knowledge of the reason till they reached the campus. The fire department responded very promptly. Before they arrived it had been discovered that the smoke was caused from a stove in the library. The smoke escaped through a flue in an upper room. MEETINGS ARE OFF.

Judges Powers and King Cancel all Utah Appointments.

LEAVE FOR THE EAST TONIGHT.

National Committee Wants Their Service—Still Talk from Here in Illinois and Ohio.

There was a stir in the Democratic camp today when the announcement was given out that Judges Powers and King had, at the behest of Chairman Jones of the National committee, cancelled all their political meeting appointments in Utah and decided to go east and take the stump for Boyd. The demand for them to do so was entirely unexpected and is understood only of late thought that calls have been made upon all of the states for their very best speakers during the last two weeks of the campaign, it being the purpose to concentrate them in the doubtful states of the great middle West.

Judge King has been expected to spend the greater part of the next ten days in southern Utah, being billed to speak in several counties. Judge Powers came home from Wyoming to take contest for. But now previous engagements are all upset and the two speakers named will leave for the East tonight. They will make their first stop at Rawlins, Wyoming, tomorrow afternoon after which they will talk in all the states en route to Illinois, perhaps winding up in Ohio. They will return, however, two or three days before the campaign closes in Utah.

DEATH OF THOMAS DEWEY.

A Faithful Saint and Pioneer Passes from the Spheres of Action.

At 2 o'clock this morning Elder Thomas Dewey, a resident of the Fifth ward, this city, departed this life at the age of 83 years. Brother Dewey has been ailing for some time past but it was not until yesterday morning that his ailment took on a serious aspect, when he was rendered prostrate by a paralytic stroke, from which he never rallied.

The deceased was honored and respected by all who knew him and he was generally looked upon as a man of a kind and charitable disposition, ever ready to do good unto his fellow men. Simple, plain and unostentatious, he gained the good feelings of all of his associates, by whom his death will be deeply mourned.

Elder Dewey was a native of Derby, England, from which place he emigrated to Nauvoo in the year 1841. He was a faithful and zealous Latter-Day Saint, always upholding the principles of the Gospel and helping to sustain the Church of which he was a member. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his sudden parting away, all of whom but hardly the loss which they have sustained in the departure of a living husband, a kind and indulgent father.

Funeral services will be conducted from the Fifth ward meeting house at 2 p.m. tomorrow. Friends of the family are invited to attend.

SENTENCE SUSPENDED.

Joseph Harwin Finds Guilty in Violating the Quarantine Ordinance.

Joseph Harwin, who resides at 17 Wellington court in East Second South street, whitewashed a former place of his guilty to violating the quarantine ordinance in the police court today, and substituted it with one of guilty.

Attorney Woods, in behalf of the defendant, stated to the court that Harwin was a stranger in these parts, having come to this city out about two weeks ago. Shortly after his arrival here, his little son took down with diphtheria from which malady the child on last Thursday died. The defendant was charged with going out of the house without its being properly quarantined—an offense which he admitted; but he had no other plea of action, because of his being unacquainted with neighbors who could send him or get medicine or do any other service. Mr. Woods asked for a suspension of sentence in view of the circumstances and also in view of the fact that the defendant was in no way at fault.

Prosecutor Young said that the offense was a grave one, and while he had sympathy with the defendant he was not inclined to think it right to signal that a fine should be taught to such an act, and that at least the minimum penalty should be imposed.

Judge Winters said that he agreed with the prosecution in the contention that it was a grave offense, but considering the fact that he had to give the defendant the benefit and therefore suspended sentence.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE GRAND.

Tickets to the Grand will open the week with the first presentation given here since the Walker Opera house was opened with it in 1885, of Sky Parlor. It has been a crowd-pleaser wherever presented and the Grand should enjoy a good run of patronage during the week.

THE LYCEUM.

Burlington's Minstrels begin a three night's engagement at this house this evening. The performance is said to be a good one, equally as good, in fact, as the one given at the Theater, when a company of minstrels was booked.

Ned Boyle's new play—Andre the Gardener—is being pushed by Mr. Hoyt in looking to the production of his new play, to be titled as the Grand during the week beginning November 16. The other night when Boyle was in town he did not seem fully decided upon her. Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt were welcomed by the Grand company in the presentation and one double interest is being manifested in this the first production.

MINOR MENTION.

Superintendent Bennett of the Union Pacific returned from Omaha this morning.

The Twenty-first quorum of Elders will meet in the Nineteenth ward meeting house this evening at 7:30.

J. C. Nelson pleaded guilty in the police court today to selling milk without a license, and he will be allowed to explain tomorrow at 2 o'clock.

Joseph Bull Jr., his wife, oldest daughter and two younger children are all confined to sick beds. Mr. Bull is suffering from typhoid fever, having been so for six weeks to the anxiety of his friends. It is believed now, however, that all are on the road to recovery.

The sweet strains of music from the minstrel band today frightened a horse standing in front of the Juvenile Insurance office and caused the surrounding equine to begin every indication. He was extricated from his rather uncomfortable position after the horse had run and had been reduced to several pieces.

A gentleman in the eastern part of town informs us that a middle aged and destitute elder woman is going the rounds of the city pleading the sickness of a son who is in the street, and begins by telling a doubtful tale of sickness and bereavement of being a widow and having an only son who, she says, is lying sick in Salt Lake. Housewives failing to buy of her are accosted by her existence of this they will be without this winter, that their husbands are out of work, it is a month, and her manner has frightened some people. She is thought to be demented, and some believe her dangerous.

Cure Is Universal.

Professor Tarr of Cornell University (Ithaca, N. Y.), who is just back from his summer in Greenland, congratulates himself on being the only geologist who has ever seen the entire Labrador coast from end to end. The Hope, in which he sailed, kept within sight of land all the way from Newfoundland to Hudson Straits, going very slowly because of the fog, and there was about only one man's darkness during the entire fortnight encountered in this way. Professor Tarr was enjoyed much as he visited some before, when he was on the United States Geological Survey. He was assigned a task which necessitated his driving across the state of Texas along the line of greatest width, a distance of 1,300 miles.

Education is a curious thing. A Russian nihilist, a graduate of the University of St. Petersburg, was recently pursuing advanced studies in Cornell University. He was proclaiming his great admiration for President Lincoln, when some one chanced to mention his assassination. The Russian's look of astonishment would have made his fortune on the stage. Yet the same man, who did not know Abraham Lincoln was assassinated, had read every word of Cooper's novels in a Russian translation.

The present prominence of economic questions has thrown light upon the circumstances of the rise of the Cornell University. By the year 1880 the total registration in all colleges of collegiate science was 174; in 1890 it amounted to 1,000. The growth was entirely in the direction known at Cornell as "politics," while indirect courses on the history of politics, laws, etc., history of the growth and development of political institutions, etc., the gain is about zero. American universities serve a court of appeals to the political machine, throwing an increased number of educated men into the track of the world in any line in which the nation is particularly in need of light.

Cornell students need not go to Germany for lectures, as has been common in them. Professor Wilhelm Dwight, first secretary of the German Art Scholarship institute at Athens, has been retaining at Cornell on the executive committee at Homer's Troy, in which he played a part on the Greek theater and on Greek architecture. He introduced to the Cornell and Professor Johannes Conrad of the University of Halle, Germany, who formed at Cornell last year on the recent socialistic legislation in Germany. Professor Conrad is a very counselor at the Berlin empire, and knew how whereof he spoke.

The Cornell University library reports a growth for the year 1895-6 of 12,028 volumes and 1,250 pamphlets, not to represent the normal growth of the library since its endowment by the Hon. Henry Sage. The total number is now 195,000 volumes and 30,000 pamphlets. About 1,000 volumes annually is Cornell University's normal growth. During the past year Mr. William Fake gave 1,300 duplicate Dante, but some to be added to the Sage Dante Romanic collection; ex-Provost White and Theodore Stanton presented some 500 each; Professor Crane gave 230 rare and valuable volumes on the rest came in small gifts. The year was chiefly marked by the matter of gratuitously, by the acquisition of a large number of rare and valuable old editions, periodicals, chiefly German, was eighteen-century English.

The Cornell University campus is to have a new gateway as its entrance, given by the Hon. Andrew D. White of the United States Venezuelan commission. The total value of the gate is estimated will cost $5,000, in designing by Architect W. H. Miller of Ithaca. It is to be built of adequate stones of Ohio sandstone and Scotch granite, roadway opening, seventeen feet in width, flank between piers twenty-seven feet in length, and is flanked by footway openings seven feet in width. Tablets set into the centre of the wing walls are inscribed respectively, "Member from Ithaca, New Haven, Decline more learned and more liberal." Inscription during their respective terms of office. The inscription is as follows: "Let there be light."

Alfonso V of Aragon and Naples was entitled the Magnanimous because on more than one occasion he showed pleasure taken to war instead of putting them to death or holding them for a ransom.
