WOMAN AND HOME.

Managing the Little Ones.

Babies grow so fast they change almost from day to day, and the little trick that you think not quite pretty will be forgotten tomorrow or a day later. If you say nothing to the baby about it, but induce him to stop it simply by attracting his attention to something else. The whole secret of "training" baby is to furnish him amusement, or let him find it for himself, and in case he finds something amusing that it is best and wise as should not have drawn his attention by spanking, one and quietly in the other attention disappears.

Don't imagine he will think you are afraid to correct him, he can see the best him on the matter at all, and does not realize that he is "managed;" he simply knows he is having a good time. By and by, when baby is old enough to understand motives and effects, and you first explain your reasons to him, then if he does not obey it means a punishment be necessary to enforce it, and, for as soon as a child is old enough to understand what you tell him, and the reason why, he must not be allowed to realize that he can disregard the parents' command.

Make as few rules as possible. Never make a rule or give a command unless it is necessary and wise to do so, but when done, then gently but firmly enforce it. On the other hand, give praise and kisses for proper obedience. Let the child overhear you telling papa that he is just a splendid boy to obey; then you always know when you tell him not to do a thing that he will obey you, and will watch the effort. It will please the little one and help it to obey you in future. Never rule by "don'ts." Praise the little one all you can truthfully, and find fault as seldom as possible.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Effect of Surroundings on Children.

"I need a new carpet for my dining room," commented a woman recently, "but I tell the children while they are at exercises at table the old one will do as well. It is a Wilton worn to canvas, and on occasion the maid actually takes a scrubbing brush to the grease spots." "Why, do you know," replied her companion, "I have bought a new one on purpose to improve my children's manners while eating. They greatly admire the freshness room, and it is a matter of pride with each one as he gets down from his chair to see how few crumbs he can leave."

This is a whole sermon in itself. Children are peculiarly susceptible to the beauty or otherwise of their surroundings. They may not be able to voice it—may not be conscious of it even, but it has more than a potent influence on their behavior. "I need to notice," said an observing person, "in a family which I visited quite frequently, that when my call was confined to a chat in the library, a lovely smoking room, full of books and sunshine, if the children were visible at all they were orderly, seemingly mannerly and charming, while on the occasions when I would go down informally to the home luncheon or dinner their behavior was quite different. The room was dark and cozy, and the belongings good, but with all freshness worn off. I finally attributed the change in the children's conduct to their different environments."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

A Query.

Why is it that only the homely, neat twenties girls receive praise for their virtues? There are just as many good pretty girls as there are ugly ones, yet one seldom hears much about the good deeds of pretty women.

Yet how much more credit could pretty women deserve for doing acts than ugly ones. Nobody expects much of pretty women. They can be selfish, tyrannical, almost anything they like, without being blamed very much, while the ugly girl must be good to be endured by her fellow creatures.

Still it's rather hard for the pretty woman who practices a few virtues never to get credit for them.

I was struck by this recently when the name of a girl came up for discussion, and a number of very shrewd were told about her. One man, who had known her all his life, said that he liked her anyway, that at her home she nursed the sick, and the waste of the poor were relieved by her generosity. I had heard stories about this girl for many years, and tale was the first kind one. If the girl had been homely she'd have had no temptation; she would have led a sedate life, and nursing the sick and feeding the poor would have been all to be said of her. But the pretty girl's shortcomings were thoroughly observed and her kindnesses untold.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Distinguished Artist.

Among the really distinguished artists in the women's world is Miss Ottilie Bode, of London, who is the proud possessor of the golden star given by the Drawing society of Great Britain and Ireland. Besides being a gifted painter of flowers, landscapes and figures, she is an accomplished linguist as well. French, German, Dutch and English are equally familiar to her, and in her little salon, whose walls she has decorated with bunches of wild flowers and trailing vines, she discusses the latest novel in any language or the latest scientific or philosophical work in any tongue.—Exchange.

Women and Literature.

Mrs. Lyman Abbott says the letters she receives as editor of a department in a magazine devoted to the interests of women bring her sometimes to the conclusion that women look to literature nowadays as the good fortunate of a family used to be fabled to look to the ministry as the last resort of the individual who has received no training for any occupation, and has no especial aptitude in any direction. He who could do nothing else can preach, and she who can do nothing else imagines she can make a living by her pen.

Sock Wholesome.

It is said to be a good plan to soak whalebones a few minutes in warm water in order to make them flexible and conform to the figure when put in the casings. Nothing than has ever been introduced to take the place of whalebones is a perfect success. Be careful to use a thin, flexible whalebone. Remember if you are a stout woman that you must not insist on having your waist made as long as if you were taller. Nothing is more awkward than a long waist on a short woman. It is easy to remedy such a defect in your figure by raising the waist line in the dress.—New York Tribune.

Perhaps you do not know that you can get pictures of almost any stone which has been made in the last thirty years. Make a note of all the letters and figures on your old stone, and take or send them to some stone dealer of long standing, and they will tell you if you can get pieces of your stone, and where; and they cost but little. Have a set of stone fronts sent with the castings, for those now in the store are probably rusted out, or nearly so, and one not will be troublesome to put in again. The fronts are not a trifle, and are well worth while.

Prune wheat flour should have the following characteristics: When handled, some should adhere to the finger; if a hard fall be spinned, it should not sift through the fingers, but should cling together, forming a little ball, which will show the fine lines of the palm for some time after release. If a little ball of flour be dropped on a table it should even then preserve its form and uniformity, at least in large lumps.

THE CRY OF MILLIONS

OH, MY BACK! STOP IT NOW, SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have spent much money, and from different physicians without relief. About three months ago I was suffering from a very severe attack that almost prostrated me for a week, a friend recommended me to use a bottle of Doan's Kidney Pills. Since I did so I was not troubled at all. Since I am able to put on my clothes, when I had Pain Pills from the Hooker, when the GERMAN KIDNEY TEA, is for sale. I immediately commenced using the tea. It has an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the people at the hotel, in a few days I was happy to state that I was a new man. I have continued the tea to all appearances as I have been.
