THE ENGLISH SUCCESSION.

Possibilities Discussed—Mourning in the Metropolis.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The gloom now pervading the country which was thrown over the festive Christmas tide by the death of the Duke of Clarence, has been augmented by the announcement that the Princess Mary of Teck, will be married very shortly to the Prince of Wales, the heir-apparent to the throne. The marriage will be celebrated in the chapel royal, St. James, the Princess Mary of Teck, will be married in her mourning garb of crape and bombazine. The wedding will be a very quiet affair, the Queen being prostrated by the bereavement. The marriage will be followed by a honeymoon spent at Sandringham, the Prince of Wales's country residence.

The announcement will be given at the Drawing Room on Friday tonight, the Queen having ordered their doors as a mark of respect to the dead Prince. All theatres are closed, and the Queen has issued a proclamation to her loyal subjects requiring the strictest observance of the court mourning for the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Clarence.

The proclamation will be given at the Drawing Room on Friday tonight, the Queen having ordered their doors as a mark of respect to the dead Prince. All theatres are closed, and the Queen has issued a proclamation to her loyal subjects requiring the strictest observance of the court mourning for the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Clarence.

Telegrams from all parts of the Kingdom show that the death of the Prince has caused the greatest sorrow. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, Aldermen, Lord of Prince Albert Victor, and personal attendants to the Queen, arrived at Sandringham from Balmoral Castle. Its inhabitants took a special train for Sandringham to express the Queen their sympathy. Her Majesty was prostrated by the blow that has fallen upon her, through the death of her grandson, and is not the equal to the task of comforting the Duke of Connaught. She still remains at Balmoral Castle.

On the Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales is supported and worn out by their continued watching by the bedside of their son. The condition of Princess Mary is pitiable. She was torn from room to room, weeping bitterly, she cached to made to stay in the place the Prince of Wales breathed, and appears to be dazed at the sudden taking off of her betrothed husband. She refuses to touch food, and her condition is such that the medical corps causes much apprehension regarding her.

The sincerest messages of condolence have poured in, and already such messages have been received from most of the rulers of the world.

It may be stated that Prince George is the most popular among all classes of British society that was his brother.

The St. James Gazette this afternoon in an article which it is believed reflects general feeling, says: "It would be sycophancy to say that the hapless prince was regarded with the enthusiastic devotion of an intense personal loyalty to those over whom he might have ruled. The Prince of Wales Duke can hardly make any serious difference in the political or dynastic situation."

Messages of condolence have been received from the rulers of all the countries in the world. The Prince of Wales left the house in the afternoon, accompanied by Admiral Stephenson, for a short walk. An Associated Press correspondent met him walking slowly on the road. He gave a distressed look.

The Queen directed the publication of the following: "Her Majesty heard early this morning, with the deepest grief, the news of the calamity which has befallen the royal family and the whole nation. The Queen was devoted to attached to her grandson, who always evinced the greatest affection towards her Majesty, and whose charming disposition and high character had endeared him to her since childhood. Her Majesty, on receiving yesterday the news of the Duke's critical illness, was anxious to proceed at once to Sandringham, but was dissuaded by medical advice."

"Show the death of Princess Charlotte has caused so sad a gloom as has now been so deeply touched," says the Standard, "sympathy and patriotic pride will fell in no small degree in America."

The Chronicle says there is a feeling that the continuance of the royal succession cannot be taken as well guaranteed.
