ON A MISSION.

Open Air Preaching.—Incident in an English Village.

Correspondence Deseret News.

35 NORTHLEAD ST., Glastonbury, England, May 5th, 1893.—The weather for the past several weeks has been lovely, rendering it very favorable for holding open air meetings, distributing tracts, etc., in which we have been very busily engaged of late. We have generally had a fair attendance of the people at our meetings and there has been seldom created much disturbance. The people generally listen very attentively to what we have to say. This has been very encouraging as it enabled us to get the Gospel principles before many.

Last Wednesday evening, May 3rd, was the first occasion for some time that we have been disturbed to any great extent. On that evening we visited the town of Street a short distance from here, and after selecting a suitable place in one of the most thickly settled streets announced our meeting and commenced with the usual exercises. All went on very quietly until we were dismissing, when a lady came up, shaking her fist at us and using very abusive language. We paid no attention to her and went on distributing some of our Articles of Faith, when a young man walked up and presented a large book, enquiring of us if we knew what book it was. We replied that we did not. He said that he would inform us, and went on at quite a rate for some time about polygamy, the imprisonment of women, Mountain Meadows Massacre, etc., stating that he read of this in the book which was written by Mrs. Stenhouse when he said had miraculously escaped from the Mormons.

Finding we could not reason with him we appealed to the audience (which numbered a hundred or more) asking that they give us fair play by allowing us to state our side of the question. To this request a response of "Hear, hear," was given on all sides. We then related the facts as to the premises and to our surprise were listened to without interruption. No one made any reply. We then bade them good night and started but had not proceeded far when we were overtaken by the father of the young man who had been talking. He made use of some very abusive language and brought forth the book which his son had and with which he seemed to be much more familiar than with the Bible. He waved it in the air at the same time informing the people of its contents.

As he was even more unreasonable than his son we again appealed to the audience (which now filled the street) for a chance to state our side and again received the hearty response of "hear hear." After we had finished, our opponent took the stand and delivered a lecture on the city of Utah, where he said the Mormons live. After listening and replying, we took our departure.

We enjoyed a pleasant walk of about three miles through the country to our lodging, praising God and rejoicing that we were accounted worthy to be numbered with those who were spoken evil of falsely for the Gospel's sake.

Wonderland.

Lovers of comic opera who have not witnessed the performances given by the Ideal Opera company at this popular house should pay the resort a visit, for the opportunity is furnished by the management of this house of witnessing the latest comic opera, given by a first-class company, at a price of admission within the reach of all. Commencing on Thursday Gilbert & Sullivan's opera Iolanthe will be given with the favorite Miss Moore in the leading role.

A novel exhibition will be seen in the Curio Hall, the management having secured representative cowboys and will give a cowboy convention, such characters as Kentucky Frank, Mountain Charlie, Lariat Bill and others appearing.

Where is William Turpin?

W. Smith of Taumangs, Bay of Plenty, New Zealand, is anxious to hear of the whereabouts of William Turpin, who left Brigington, near Leeds, Yorkshire, England, a good many years ago. On coming to America he went to Nauvoo and later came to Utah.

Resolutions of Condolence.

At the regular practice meeting of the Salt Lake Tabernacle choir, on Friday evening, May 19th, it was resolved, by its committee, that in the death of John Saunders Lewis the organization finds not a faithful, capable and an efficient worker and one who from long years of association had endeared himself to every member by his affable disposition, even temperament and genial manner.

While the call was so sudden as to be almost startling in its denouement, we are proud to say we know of no one in the society better prepared for such an emergency than he, and while we mourn with his family we bow in the humble of "one who doeth all things well."

Like so many of his countrymen the soul of Brother Lewis delighted in harmony. Inherent in his nature it had been his theme from boyhood, and next to the Gospel, had been his chief aim and ambition in life. His own compositions grace the pages of the Deseret Sunday school song book, the L. D. S. Psalmody, the Deseret Chorister and other publications at home as well as musical magazines abroad, and it is but justice to the deceased to bear record that tuneful and appropriate music, of his own writing, formed the crowning feature at the funeral services.

Elder Lewis died suddenly, of heart affinity, while sitting in an easy chair listening to a favorite stanza which he had just requested his daughter to play for him. How eminently proper that such a spirit should be wafted hence to organ accompaniment!

Now, therefore be it resolved that to the death of Brother Lewis, his wife and children have sustained the loss of an affectionate husband and an idolized father, the Church a faithful and consistent Latter-day Saint and the choir a painstaking and competent member, while the crowded condition at the obsequies testified the high esteem in which he was held by his friends and neighbors.

Be it further resolved that these resolutions be furnished the press for publication, and a suitable copy sent to the bereaved family.

Want a Fair in Beaver.

"I am going to see the merchants of this city and see what we can do toward organizing a fair association," pleasantly replied Dr. Fennemore in response to a request for news, says the Beaver Chronicle. "I believe we can organize such an institution in southern Utah, and keep it going. It is too far for any considerable number of our people to go to Salt Lake each year, and besides that there will be no territorial fair this year. I cannot say anything about the details I would suggest, but would first like to interview the business men here and then will have something to say about the project."
