Failure of an Ice Machine Company.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 1.—The Arctic Ice Machine manufacturing company, of this city, made an assignment today. The company has been in operation for a number of years. The failure to secure due bonded in the construction of machines brought on a number of suits for breach of contract in last January, when the company secured an extension from its creditors. The liabilities are not stated, but it is said they will exceed the assets by $100,000.

California's Stock of Wheat.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 1.—The stock of wheat in all California cell board warehouses aggregate 328,000 tons, as against 196,000 tons September 1.

Suit Against an Insurance Agent.

CHICAGO, Oct. 1.—The Home Life Insurance company, of Brooklyn, today began suit in the federal court against Edgar H. Kelling, who for a series of years prior to last February, acted as its general agent for the Northwest. The bill alleges an examination of his accounts on January last showed he had embezzled $6,000. When the discovery was made, Kelling gave notes and mortgages to indemnify the company, and it is for an accounting and foreclosure of the mortgages and collection of the same due on the notes that this action is begun.

Argentine Finances.

BUENOS AYRES, Oct. 1.—Gold closed yesterday at 320 per cent, premium.

The government has issued a decree the substance of which is the issuance of forced currency and fixing the premium on gold at 320 per cent. The government has also suspended payment on gold for two years. In addition a new monetary unit has been adopted, composed of a fixed amount of silver and nickel. This money is now being coined. The committee reported favorably on the issue of $4,500,000 in paper pesetas and upon the establishment of a national Argentine bank.

FIRST DISTRICT COURT.

The Proceedings at Ogden and Provo Yesterday.

Before Judge Miner at Ogden yesterday, the following cases came up:

William Crawford vs. Harvey Booth et al; continuation of trial; verdict for plaintiff of $5000.

R. F. Lovell vs. P. A. Cox; trial, Maloney and Perkins for plaintiff, P. J. Barrett for defendant; verdict of $90 for plaintiff.

Charles Berry vs. Jarvis-Conklin Trust company; trial, Maloney and Perkins for plaintiff, L. R. Rhodes for defendants. In this case the plaintiff brought suit against the defendants for damages said to have been sustained by colliding with a steam motor at Five Points some time last winter. The plaintiff is closely related to an Indian, so it is said, and he is endeavoring to establish that the accident was caused on account of the negligence of the engineer of the motor. On the other hand the defendants hold that the plaintiff was fearfully intoxicated and that the accident was entirely his fault.

AT PROVO.

Yesterday at Provo, before Judge Blackburn, the grand jury reported having found nine indictments.

The case for trial was The People vs. John Harrington, charged with having robbed Mr. Gibbey's store in Provo last July. Mr. Gibbey, the prosecuting witness, was brought into court on attachment and fined $5 for his negligence in not being present to testify in the case. He gave testimony to the effect that on July 15 he saw the defendant and two others wandering around close by his store. He next saw them after they had broken into his place of business. The door was broken in and a number of articles were missing. Tobacco, cigars, underclothing and sundry articles were identified by the witness, which were found in possession of the defendant.

Marshal John A. Brown saw the defendant on the circus grounds on the date named and watched his course. He was in company with two other boys, who are in court near the defendant. They were pointed out as suspicious characters. They were next seen at American Fork with the goods exhibited in court in their possession. The defendant and his pals had confessed in substance to having broken into the store.

A Big Bed of Coal Afire.

There is a mountain of coal in Wild Horse valley, Wyoming, which has been burning for more than thirty years. It sends up dense volumes of smoke, and at times the gas from it is almost suffocating, even at a distance of fifty to seventy-five miles from the burning mass.—St. Louis Republic.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT NEAR GREEN RIVER.

A Drunkard Jumps into the San Francisco Bay.—Wonderful Gold Discovery Near Rock Springs.

Helena Journal—Considerable excitement was created on Broadway, in front of the postoffice, at about 8 o'clock last evening, when Dr. H. L. King rushed up to H. J. Cassidy, as the latter was ascending the postoffice steps, and began to belabor him with a rawhide. After laying the rawhide across Cassidy's shoulders a half dozen times, Dr. King turned and jumped into a hack. By this time Cassidy had recovered from his surprise and sprung toward the hack, but just as he reached the door, the carriage drove away.

The Journal man, who interviewed Dr. King last evening, he made the following statement:

"I have whipped Mr. H. J. Cassidy this evening because of his actions in reference to my wife, both before she left Helena and since she has been east. He made a special effort while we were all meeting together at the North Boston Avenue to make himself agreeable to her when I was away, and by his pleasant manner and musical abilities succeeded in winning her affections. A letter from him to her, enclosed in the most affectionate terms, came into my hands, which was the first information I had of his duplicity, but to save appearation upon his demand I promised that the affair should go no further. I decided to leave the matter quiet and sent her east on a visit. Later developments prove that he did not attempt to keep his promises to me and through the medium of a third person succeeded in keeping up the intimacy by correspondence and induced her to go from Detroit and meet him in Minneapolis on his recent vacation. I have the testimony and affidavits of several Helena people who saw them together there and further proof of it from the chief of police at Minneapolis, while I had every reason to believe her to be in Detroit all the time.

Rock Springs Miner—Clarence Hamlin, U. S. attorney, received a telegram on Sunday from Green River informing him that a man had been killed on the railroad track near Peru, a small station west of Green River. No one saw the accident, but several testified as to the position of the body when found, and everything went to show that the unfortunate man had been walking his way west on the train under cover of darkness and by some mishap fell under the wheels. His body, judging from the traces of blood and the trail made along the ground, must have been dragged quite a distance.

The deceased was an old, one-armed man named John Kroh, who had been around Rock Springs and Green River several days peddling pins, needles and such articles. About $1.50 in cash was found on his person and his bundle with his little traps was lying near him.

Laramie Boomerang—Hon. William Taylor, one of the very foremost citizens of Rock Creek, is in the city. Today he pulled out his pocket book and took a neat little package from it. The paper was filled with gold pieces as large as bird seed. Mr. Taylor said that recently a wonderful vein came out to his place and went up on the hill close to Rock creek, where there is a gravel road which was originally the bed of a ravine, and which extends from Rock Creek to Bookhale, a distance of twenty-five miles. This old water course is as level as a race track and a person can drive with a horse and wagon from one end to the other without putting the brake on. This tenderfoot went to work and out of a single pan full of sand washed twenty-five cents worth of gold. Mr. Taylor says this golden pathway is undoubtedly an old river bed. This is the history of some of the placer ground in California, they are old river beds and they make the very richest placer grounds. Mr. Taylor says there is plenty of water up there to work this ground with. Strange as it may seem this old river bed disappeared suddenly as soon as it reaches Rock creek, the stream undoubtedly having been obliterated by some natural convulsion.

S. F. Chronicle—A man apparently about forty years of age and dressed like a laborer walked out to the end of Meiggs' wharf early yesterday afternoon and jumped into the water. Martin Reporter Fitzgerald rushed up, thinking he had observed an attempt at suicide. But the man had apparently jumped in only for the purpose of a bath, for he was swimming about with all his clothing on. He was taken to the old City Hall in a patrol wagon. He gave the name of Thomas Coleman, and said that he lived on Sutter street, between Larkin and Polk. Three rosaries, a prayer book and a Salvation Army songbook were among the effects found in his clothing. There was also a document showing that he had separated from his wife in Oregon and had received $500 as his share of the estate. No money was found upon him.

Divorce Laws.

The American bar association has taken a large contract on its hands. It is nothing less than starting an agitation which shall in time induce the forty-four states of the Union to pass a uniform divorce law. There is one other way to secure this result. That is by act of congress. But congress can only pass a United States divorce law after a constitutional amendment gives it the privilege of doing so. Securing such amendment will require a long and tedious process, and the Bar association rightly judges that the result can be reached more quickly by legislation among the forty-four states and territories.

A uniform divorce law will commend itself to most persons. But just what the cause for divorce should be will be another matter, and it will be a long time before the states can agree on this. Conservative sentiment favors only the scriptural divorce, without the privilege of marriage. But this idea is opposed by individuals who have had experience similar to that encountered in a case in one of the middle states. A large estate was to be divided among several heirs. A most advantageous sale was negotiated for the larger part of it. Buyer and seller were eager to come to terms, but one of the female heirs had in her youth contracted an unfortunate marriage. The husband was a dissipated, worthless creature, who for years had not lived with his wife. Yet in that state she could not get a divorce from him.

When the sale of the estate came on the husband, out of sheer spite, refused to sign away his right to his wife's share of the property. Nothing could avail to break his "conscience" in the matter, and so the sale was abandoned, and much inconvenience and loss resulted. Instances like this suggest to us a clear title without the signature.

Many similar cases might be cited, so many that in states where divorce laws are liberal it will be hard to convince the citizens that more stringent enactments in this respect are for the well being of community.

A Real Reformer.

The American council at Glasgow reports an enterprise which takes the lead of nearly all others in really bettering the condition of poor working people, in that city is a cooking school. This is nothing singular, for there are cooking schools in every city, and they are attended by the best ladies of the land. But the Glasgow place has a feature of its own. This is a washing department. The principal of the school not only teaches workingmen's wives to cook appetizing and wholesome food, but she visits them in their homes to see that they cook it.

The working women attend the classes, of which there are two—one for girls, the other for married women. Every detail of improved sanitation is taught—cleanliness, ventilation and drainage. Not even does the work stop here. Language, manners and dress are included as subjects for instruction. The talks are given in such a way as not to hurt the pride of the most sensitive. The teacher visits the women's homes to help them in person. The improvement is already marked, especially in ventilation, cleanliness and cooking. Their homes being made more attractive, men will not be tempted to visit the gin houses, and that, in time, the fearful drunken toss which has overshadowed Glasgow so long may be stayed.

The United States treasury department has recently set on the case of a ring which a young man sent from New York to its sweetheart in London. After long and tedious work they succeeded and the girl started the ring. Not only was the the young man's love scorned, but his money was about to make him pay duty on the ring as if it had been an imported one. Finally, after consulting all the authorities, the department decided that if the ring was purely of domestic manufacture, and if it had not been in any way improved in value by the sea air and its trip abroad, then the jilted youth might have the poor consolation of taking it again to himself without paying a tariff import. Not even broken hearts escape the argus eyes of the treasury department.

Many a time persons have declared they were able to see blood on the moon, but it has been left for the great Lick telescope to find sweat on the moon. Through this the California astronomers have detected a luminous projection which they believe to be sweat. Should further observation verify this, the next thing will be to look for indications of an atmosphere, and with the still more powerful lenses which the telescope of the future may produce astronomers will look for the indications of life on the supposed desirable planet.

If you have still any United States 4½ per cent bonds you can change them into 2 per cents at any time, since the period for thus exchanging those bonds has been indefinitely extended by the treasury department.

Speaking of witnesses of the present day, The Nineteenth Century remarks picturesquely: "Women, that most efficient partnerships to the story of science, has never been so vividly put on the stage as at the present moment."

Some of the critics consider that Amelie Rives Chanler has considerably matured, and colored down since she wrote "The Quick and the Dead." That may be, but her latest story "Anomalia" by St. John," shows that she is still an expert in kissing.

is more especially that form of hereditary disease, and for this simple reason: Among those impure and insufficient blood, the germs become itself in the circulation, which are composed of white corpuscles. Now it is a period of fatal life when the whole body consists of white corpuscles, and therefore the subject child is therefore the subject child to all the diseases that flesh is heir to, the scrofulous diseases. But there is a period entirely the reverse of this, whether hereditary or acquired. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which cures every form of the disease and gives to the blood the quality and color of health. Get Hood's. "Whenever my son contracted a cold he was attacked and not recovered for a long time with scrofula sores. The physicians of length said we gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla, which we did. Two bottles cured him. He is now 10 years old and has not had any sign of scrofula since. We recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as our friends." Mrs. E. C. CLIFFER, 6 Linden St., Cincinnati, O.
