DR. NANSEN'S RETURN.

There is joy among Dr. Nansen's friends and general satisfaction in the scientific world at the safe arrival on Norwegian soil of the daring Arctic explorer. He left Christiania on June 24th, 1895, and he left his friends they could not expect to hear of him in three years. He has kept his word and returned at the time indicated. Not only is he himself safe and sound, but it appears his ship, which long ago was reported crushed in the ice, is on her way back with his companions.

The name of the men who have shared his adventures in the frozen regions are:

Captain Otto Sverdrup, shipmaster; Sigvard Hesitt Hansen, lieutenant in the Norwegian navy and director of the astronomical, meteorological and magnetic observations; Henrick Blessing, surgeon and botanist; Theodore C. Jacobsen, mate; Peter Hendriksen, carpenter; Anton A. Nelsen, chief engineer; Lars Petersen, second engineer; Hjalmar Johansen, officer in the Norwegian army; Bernard Nordahl, electrician; Ivan Ingstad, carpenter, and Adolph Juell, steward.

Dr. Nansen advanced the theory that a vessel properly constructed, so as to withstand the pressure of the ice, would drift across the Polar region. He based this supposition on the fact that the trend of the Jeannette was in this direction, and that pieces of drift frequently have been found on the east and west coasts of Greenland and elsewhere, apparently from the Siberian coasts, judging from their character. Relying on the current he felt sure of making the goal in safety.

He did not see the North Pole though. Still he advanced four degrees further north than any of his predecessors. He demonstrated that with sufficient provisions it is possible to stay in the Arctic regions for years and that polar explorations are about as practicable as those in any of the wild regions of the earth. What the new scientific results of his undertaking are cannot even be conjectured until he shall have laid the story of his experiences. Prof. Nordenskiöld expressed great confidence in Nansen when the latter planned his expedition. He looked for great results because he knew the ability of the Norwegian scientist, and it is safe to say that Nansen has neglected no opportunity of enriching himself with such knowledge as he might gather by personal observations and logical deductions.

The safe return of Dr. Nansen will stimulate interest in the expedition of Andree who, in the beginning of the month, was only waiting for a favorable wind to carry him in his balloon over the frozen regions. If he accomplishes his aerial journey, he will be heard from before long somewhere in the catacombs of civilization.

IDAHO'S BANK ROBBERY.

The bold robbery of the bank at Montpelier, Idaho, on Thursday afternoon may be a revelation to many people as to what is possible in the part of a few daring thieves, and ought to be a suggestion for places like that to be more thoroughly officered than now. The town where the robbery occurred is one of the most thriving in the Bear Lake valley; it is on the railway, and with the number of people in its business streets and the generally bustling spirit of the place, it seems incredible that a bank robbery could occur there in broad daylight and a line taken made good their escape, even temporarily. But it was done. Three armed desperadoes galloped such citizens as were on the sidewalk in front of the bank, while the two manipulated half a dozen men according to their own sweet will, deliberately compelling them to stand the guns in the face and to pour about six thousand dollars into a sack, with which the robbers then rode away.

It may be called pretty good work for a sheriff to get a posse in pursuit of the robbers in ten minutes after such an exploit has taken place and expedite matters sufficiently for the emergency of the case. The success yet may be that some of the young will be seriously hurt or killed before a capture is effected, and that not all the money be recovered. The fact is that there is sometimes delay in a town police administration when it takes the time stated to institute pursuit after robbers, murderers or other criminals in the capital, and there is something lax in the discipline of a bank when no policeman can be spared to drive in from the road and the place captured from thieves without a shot or not even the money sent in outside sec. If our cities of American Fork, Duchesne, Kaysville, Davis county, or towns in the state about the size of Montpelier be one and subject to such a loss as experienced, the people will not feel that either bank or peace officers were up to the line of duty unless they did not make a better showing than is witnessed at Montpelier.

AROUND GRANT'S TOMB.

The final plans for erecting and laying out the Grant monument, commemorating President U. S. Grant's tomb at New York have been decided upon, the conclusions relating thereto being reached at a meeting on Monday afternoon held in the office of the mayor of New York. The plans provide for the laying of the ground around the tomb, for the shrubbery and trees that will set off the spot, and the general plan of landscape gardening. The grounds to the north will be terraced in easy, graceful lines consistent with the slope, and will be laid out in a lawn; to the south, east and west the irregularities that now exist will be made symmetrical, and around the humble mound and trees will relieve and soften the general effect. A wide carriageway and many footpaths will be laid out around the tomb, which will stand out prominently and squarely, the trees and shrubs not being permitted to obscure the beautiful lines of the monument. The work of laying out the grounds will cost $125,000, and it is proposed to have the work completed so that the tomb will be formally dedicated on the anniversary of Gen. Grant's birth, April 29, 1897.

It is anticipated that the occasion of the dedication will be a national event. Invitations will be extended to every state and territory in the Union to send representative delegations, and the day will be marked with a great civic and military display. One feature of the occasion will be the presence of the newly inaugurated President of the United States, with his entire cabinet. The North Atlantic squadron, together with as many ships of war from foreign nations as these nations may designate, will assemble in the Hudson river and fire salutes, and the diplomatic corps of all the nations of earth will be in attendance. War veterans and militia from all the states are also expected to be there.

It has taken a long time to raise the necessary funds, but the work has been accomplished. The Grant mausoleum is the first in the country for a national hero that has been built with money altogether from the voluntary contributions of the people. Its cost is about $600,000, and there are over 80,000 subscribers to the fund. The event of the dedication of the monument on April 29th next ought to be a notable caution because of the great here whose life and labors it is intended to commemorate.

PARENTAL DISHONOR.

There is getting to be vastly too much disregard here of the virtuous sentiment that should be maintained between the sexes, and the past few years seem to have inaugurated a change from former satisfactory conditions that is far from commendable or encouraging for the future safety of the commonwealth. No one fairly acquainted with conditions generally in the nation will care to dispute the fact that this place is not really or had as others, but the painful knowledge that there is a trend toward the demoralized state to be witnessed elsewhere ought to be sufficient to cause parents and others who have the welfare of the community at heart to strive with increased diligence toward the preservation of personal purity in both sexes. The subject is a delicate one to deal with in public print, but existing conditions make reference thereto to be a necessity than to contain another other monitoring life.

One unfortunate feature of the evil tendency referred to was displayed by people who in what is popularly called the world, a young married street, and the young man seemed to be willing to right the wrong as far as he was able by marrying the young woman who was the mother of his child; but if he said his other intentions, and as the young man had not attained his majority he could not pursue the most honorable course under the circumstances. There is a satisfaction, however, in the knowledge that the healthy moral sentiment in the public mind will extend no sympathy to the parental dishonor that leads a person to permanently disgrace his own child or grandchild and its mother, or cause what the stamp-wagons might see. The plenal rule of common decency and of justice to an innocent life would inspire true men and women to make every reparation possible, and at any sacrifice that may be asked.

PULPIT POLITICS.

Sometimes preachers tell it just right when they touch upon politics, and sometimes they do the other thing. Last Sunday there was a western one at the last named kind at Coalbridge, Mich. The Rev. H. C. C. Ackerman, a Methodist minister, contrived to make some of his hearers feel that he was a police administrator when he takes the time stated to institute pursuit after robbers, murderers or other criminals in some one and a just manner. I said so but you that the United States has done all it can do for the silver monopolists whose silver and politics and silver as such as constitutes the idea that they have an monopolistic or money, and they want us to have no monopolists of other metals. It is a fearful calamity that people in his vicinity should be so misled as to support such a man as this Rev. Ackerman, who, if he is a Christian, is more dangerous than Democrats or any political "foe" that can be invented.

The Rev. Ackerman, like other Methodist ministers who take an opposite view of the silver question is sufficient to establish the fact that Mr. Ackerman is wholly unfitted to be the duty as a minister. His church cannot be so impudent as to require one minister, in his religious capacity, to advocate gold and another to advocate bimetallism. As a matter of fact it does neither, and since the Cambridge preacher's duty as a minister arises wholly from his official position in his congregation, he is mistaken as to his premises. It is as a politician or something of that nature that he opposes silver coinage, and not as a Christian or Christ's ministerial duty. The fellow is not entitled to worship the golden calf. When Mr. Ackerman cited the fact that Judas received thirty pieces of silver for his perfidy he should have remembered that it was not because the coin was silver but because it was standard money of the nation at that time; and he should have further considered that in the old worship which brought such disaster to Israel in the wilderness, the calf was made of the gold which he adores. But after all, this spoken of political politics is irrational and irreligious because it drags into the mire the divey which the wonder thereof extends at least to from heaven.

AUDITORIUMS NEEDED.

The failure of a vast number of people to get into Madison Square Garden, New York, to hear Bryan, gives another illustration of the great necessity in some of the larger cities of the country of places suitable for such gatherings of the people. There is not a city in the country amply provided for in this respect. Of all the cities where vast audiences assemble, Salt Lake has the best provision for accommodating a proportionate number of the people who congregate on notable occasions, and even the great Tabernacle here is now too small. At one time Chicago had a building that was large enough—too large in fact—for any single audience to meet and listen to public speakers. This was the manufacturers building at the World's Fair, which was 1,052 feet long by 197 feet wide, the central nave being 1,537 by 362 feet, giving more than ten acres of clear floor space. It would seat comfortably 128,000 people. Of course no such building as this would be satisfactory for a hall in which a man's voice is expected to reach every part, but some of the larger cities ought to give accommodation to twenty to thirty thousand people, who could hear a good speaker in a structure whose acoustic properties received suitable attention.

A German professor has been studying the progeny of a woman who died in 1800 after being a drunkard, thief and tramp for forty years. He secured records of 709 out of her 834 descendants, and out of these traced 106 were of illegitimate birth, 142 were beggars, and 181 were paid women. Women of the family has supplied 5e convicts, seven of them sentenced for murder, and in seventy-five years the blood-tainted descendants have cost the government over a million dollars for expenses in crime, almshouses and prisons.

WHAT A PROMINENT CHICAGO MAN SAYS.

H. M. Hanson, senior member of H. M. Hanson & Co., 217 N. 2d St., St. Louis, writes: I had been left with a very obstinate cough, the result of influenza, which neither seemed to yield to any other cough medicine I ever tried. I took Piso's Cure for Consumption, and they were so pleased with it that I took another bottle for my wife, who had a severe cough, and she experienced immediate relief. I always recommend this syrup to my friends.

John Cranston, 808 Hampshire Street, Quincy, Ill., writes: I have found Piso's Cure for Consumption superior to any other cough medicine I ever ever tried. It never disappoints. Price 25c.
