CHILDREN'S DAY AT THE FAIR.

Little Folks Throng Building and Grounds in Regiments.

TORM A MIGHTY MULTITUDE

Long List of Awards Made by the Judges—Splendid Horse Show—Cattle and Vegetable Display.

Today is children's day at the Fair. The fact is very apparent. From 10 a. m. until noon the little folks, accompanied by chaperons in the person of parents or teachers, crowded through the gates in contingents. It is conservative to say that out of the 15,000 public school children of Salt Lake there were few—little if any—absent from the grounds and about the building. And grounds and building need the school children, but the majority of business, and hosts of people and receiving cases, until standing room in the main building was a thing unknown. The sight was a pleasant one, and yet it was not entirely alone, because of the good people of humanity, which had its representative there numbering in the hundreds. It was the occasion for even the most stern and saddled brethren to know their children, and the children to know their parents as well as their teachers in the flesh. Every one seemed to enjoy the day. Every exhibitor was granted the use of the grounds in their respective spheres, and hundreds of twelve children. There were crying babies, many little girls sing, in tears, and the little boys were full of frolic, and the laughter and merriment contributed to clear towards enlivening the week. The places around which the children gathered were the vacant lots on the east and the Rentland pasture, for they took a keen interest in the other exhibits of Kentucky Jubilee Singers and the mules. They drew near the camps and passed soon them greatly, and received congratulations from friends.

This could be more creditable to the state than the most excellent work done by the children of Salt Lake City. The work, which is not only school, but most efficient in every department, was in evidence in the Fair. Lots of educational centers. And the organizers of the Fair that are now assembled should and can well be proud to be merit of the work of teaching. It is to be regretted that the young citizens that are such a large part of the wealth and prosperity of Utah are not better represented, but the little ones in an even manner the richness of Utah are not to be found in the Fair. The fruit exhibit is claiming a good deal of attention. It is a most creditable showing, despite the many things that blighted and killed it this year. It is indication that our fruit cannot wished to pass when it has the advantage of favorable conditions. The home of Utah is improving most remarkably. In the face of all the contributing influences that have come to bear, nothing like of his station is to be is still flourishing, and growing more magnificent every year. Mr. Hansen is the exhibitor of the main exhibits of the house that are at the fair, as they parade in front of the grand grand presentation attractions. Mr. Hansen's exhibit is a most remarkable one, and should, of attention. The winner of the cow and bull will be already remarkable by selling the stalls where these wonderful animals are tested. There is no portion of the fair that has created such widespread interest as the cattle room reach from the cattle display.
