A house shall only be granted where there appears to be a need for retail liquor sales or entertainment. The discretion of the police and the licensing of the place must be taken into consideration. In cities of over 10,000 inhabitants the retail trade in liquors must not be connected with any other kind of trade, excepting tobacco, which may not be sold in the same room and labelled bottles. Bar and saloon keepers must supply goods with non-poisonous liquors of guaranteed strength and not adulterated, and must keep drinks clear and prevent anything which may lead to the abuse of alcoholic drinks. The sale of drinks to minors under the age of sixteen is forbidden, except when accompanied by grown persons or travelling. The wives of saloon keepers are forbidden to furnish liquors to people who have been convicted of common drunkenness within three years, also to any intoxicated person. They are not allowed to furnish liquor on credit, except to a guest taking it with his meals. No claims for liquor furnished in contravention of the latter can be legally collected. Common drunkards and people who, by the addiction to liquor, endanger their welfare and welfare of their families, can be placed under legal guardianship. A fine up to the marks, or imprisonment up to four weeks, can be imposed upon any one who becomes intoxicated while engaged in work connected with the selling of life, the prevention of life, etc., when those who are engaged each week while drunk, except in cases of urgent need. The same applies to persons engaged in taking care of the health of others, such as physicians, nurses, etc. The Penal code proper provides heavier fine for the passage of the bill in accordance with existing statutes, collected and closely printed matter. Among other things the cities statistics showing that in the year 1886 there were consumed in Germany 1,125,000 hectolitres of pure alcohol, or 1.61 litres to each man, woman and child. Of these 441 litres were consumed as pure food, while the quantity of beer consumed annually is equal to an average of 19 litres for each human being in Germany. The author goes on to show that the intemperate use of spirits increases the mortality, causes suicides, is the main factor of pauperism, undermines morality and ruins finally life. It shows the enormous increase in cases of chronic alcoholism and delirium tremens in the last decade, and the percentage of prisoners in the penitentiaries and house anyone who suffer from alcoholic troubles, of the percentage of crimes committed by drunkards, etc. The Lingers issue a strong lecture in the matter. THE WORLD'S FAIR.

A Resolution Regarding the Proposed Loan of Ten Million Dollars.

CUTTING DOWN VARIOUS EXPENSES.

The Local Directory Offers to Lend the Commission Twenty Thousand Dollars.

By Telegraph to the NEWS.

THE WORLD'S FAIR COMMISSION

Wrangling with Financial Difficulties—Discussing the Salaries.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—At the afternoon session a resolution was adopted by directing the secretary of the commission to inform the members of Congress from Cook County, Illinois, to vote for the proposed government loan to the World's Fair.

The committee on labor and transportation reported that low rates for collects and exhibits would be made by the railroads if the directory would permission to request from the collection pieces for the commissioners and only transports to and from the commencing and ending of the large pieces of expense. This report was adopted.

The committee on industry reported upon the communication of the auditing committee in regard to a prospective deficit in the commissioners' appropriation for the current year. The auditing committee recommended that the salaries of President Palmer and Vice-President Walker, of $7,500 each, be cut up, that $500 be taken from the salary of the director-general, and that the April meeting of the commission be postponed until July in order to avoid the expected deficit.

The judiciary committee reported that the local directory has offered to lend the World's Fair the money between now and each time as the second, for repayment could be secured from Congress that covering the proposed extra session. Commissioner Waller of Connecticut opposed the adoption of the report. He thought it would be unwise for the commission to begin an entertaining policy to accept a loan from the local directory. The World's Fair could in any case be before the close of the fiscal year in June 30, 1892, and in the meantime the commission could apply to Congress for the needed deficit. Commissioner Storey of Delaware endorsed the report of the committee. A number of warm speeches followed. Commissioner Wade, Chief of West Virginia, closed by the judiciary committee in favor of borrowing the directory's money. He said the commission could only propositions cut off the Vice-Chairman's salary, but not the director-general's. That would be taken as an insult as a great national name. He hoped the commission would see the mistake in such an action. Commissioner Duff, Chief's colleague, who is a Republican, objected to the insinuation that politics had anything to do with the proposed loan. Vice-Chairman McKenzie drew $5000 a year for an office which had no duties. The funds threatened to give out. The only way to avoid a deficit was to cut down needless expenses. Judge Tousley of Minnesota said it looked as though the vice-chairman's salary was to be continued and that the commission feared to offer from the South or some political party. It was disheartening of the commission to think of increasing the salary. Commissioner Waller appealed to the speaker for deep politics. He offered a sole affidavit for all pending motions which was accepted by the meeting to take effect in the board of reference and control.

In effect, the latter body is authorized to borrow $20,000 of the directors in case Congress fails to appropriate money to meet the commission's deficiency, all official salaries to continue.
