NO SECRETS.

A serious misrepresentation continues to multiply attacks on Mr. John C. Cutler and the citizens who nominated him for the board of education. It calls them "secret multiplying" and adds that "the very essence of the movement means the utter destruction of the free public school idea."

The "News" sedulously sows the seed of ill feeling toward the best gentlemen who was the choice of the citizens generally at Unity Hall, but we venture to say that if he is defeated it will be due largely to such unscrupulous falsehoods as those quoted above. The esteem of the Second manufacturing ward understand the situation. They know that the interests of the schools are as safe in the hands of Mr. Cutler as in the hands of anybody in the city, and if they are confronted with the proposition that a vote for him means "the utter destruction of our free public school idea," they probably feel it their duty to cast their vote just to prove how utterly base and without foundation is the insinuation cast upon him and his friends.

The word "secret" does not apply to the candidacy of Mr. Cutler, or to any other nominee of the school board. He was nominated by a regular convention. If there were any secrets, they must be sought elsewhere.

MILITARISM.

The curse of militarism in Germany has been illustrated repeatedly in the court acts connected by one of the secret, and now comes a story from Austria of a similar nature. It is to the effect that a lieutenant of the dragoons accompanied by six privates entered a hotel and demanded a room. The proprietor politely informed the officer that the hotel was quite full and that he could not accommodate him. The lieutenant replied that a room must be found for him, and approached the door of a chamber already occupied by a guest. Finding it locked, he ordered his men to smash it in. The proprietor protested against this outrage. The officer thereupon rushed at him with his drawn sword, pursued him into the street, and, overtaking him, slashed at him with savage fury. Bleeding and unconscious he was carried into the hotel. A crowd attempted to mob the officer, who at once called his six dragoons and charged the people with drawn swords, hacking out right and left. The officer then recovered the hotel, shouting that he must have a room. It is said the officer and his men are still at large, and no steps are being taken to bring them to justice.

History seems to teach emphatically that a strong military spirit and the genius of liberty cannot dwell together in a country. It is the tendency of the former to trample upon the rights of the latter. Despotism and militarism are always twin relics of a barbarous age, and wherever one is instituted in some a guest, the other is sure to put in an appearance, too. The idea will undoubtedly be made that the new expansionists developing upon our government will demand change of policy in this regard, but that is only partially true. Spain has found out that disaster attends empire to successfully rule a distant colony, and that is by despotism. It remains for the United States to demonstrate to the world that the principle on which this government is founded are superior to the antiquated European methods, and there is no reason why we should not furnish the world lessons of the opposite nature of other countries.

LET'S TRY IT.

An interview in this evening's "News" with County Commissioner Armstrong is not only valuable for interesting suggestions as it does so from an engineer who would be entirely competent to carry out the scheme in a scientific way. The scheme is to build a dam to store many water for the coming summer's use by means of compartments, instead of reservoirs, as is the universal practice now where water is stored in all. The commissioner holds that, at a very small expense, he can so arrange things so one of our canyons as to construct an artificial glacier, one that will not begin to melt until the warm weather sets in, when the process proceeds gradually but steadily, leaving to a flow of water in addition to that of the stream out of which it was formed, that is, as the warmth increased, the volume of the stream would naturally decrease, when that from the glacier would increase in an approximate ratio, so that the water would flow any given season would be at least doubled and kept up steadily during the whole of the time when most needed.

The plan proposed by Mr. Armstrong is only unique and novel because not thought of or at least not given out before. It is really with the cost of the simplest things in the world. All that is needed, to use a colloquialism, is to press the button and the temperature will do the rest. In other words, a device must be contrived by raising the water from its bed and perhaps it is desired distance in the form of spray. Enough water could easily be carried in anywhere to form a lake for the great reservoir, and after the lake became stationary the spray would be turned on as readily as it came, a process which could be continued until a prodigious mountain of ice was formed. The exact proportions of this world of water here to be considered, with the shape of drawing it off, the size of structure with its limited as against what would be needed everywhere, which would keep of ice such a great quantity and probably amount to little or nothing, because of the evaporation and absorption of water after having transformed which produced it.

It is certainly worth trying. The experiment can be run at the expense of the people required at first or thereabouts, which, if the plan should prove successful, would be a mere bagatelle, while the benefits conferred would be great, perhaps the salvation of the region. The idea derives all its more importance from the fact that Mr. Armstrong is the very antipodes of a dreamy or visionary person. Being one of the most practical and methodical men in our midst. We should like to see his scheme given a thorough practical test. It is wonderful, it would become general and then some portion of the hardships in this western land would be at an end.

IRRIGATION FAIRS.

The Farmer and Dairyman calls attention to the fact that fruit grown by irrigation is always the highest priced in the market, because the flavor is more natural and the juice more abundant. This has been proved, it is said, at the sales of eastern and western fruit on the Denver market, where the latter always is preferred. The peaches, pears, apples, strawberries and grapes always look better, taste better, and sell quicker. The original fruits never lack for moisture. When the hours are watching the orchardist pipe in the water, which is absorbed by the growing trees. As the blossoms come forth sufficient water is applied to assist the tree in forming good fruit. When the foliage indicates drouth additional water is given, and throughout the entire growing and ripening season, man has control of his fruit's destiny. The results are perfect specimens, natural flavor and plenty of juices. Insects do not disturb the fruits, well irrigated and properly pruned trees, which grow in healthy and when harvest comes the profit is profit. Irrigation is the handmaid of orchard and vineyard prosperity.

What is true of the products of the orchard is equally true of agricultural products, and thus the extra labor required in localities where farmers and gardeners must irrigate the soil in order to bring a crop, is not without adequate compensation.

A RACE'S PROGRESS.

The question of the physical, moral and mental status of the natives of the Philippine islands is one that comes considerable astonishment. Now that they are about to become quasi if not full-fledged citizens of the United States the subject acquires increased interest and is being discussed and speculated upon far and wide. Undoubtedly exaggerated reports both ways regarding the Filipinos have been sent out and worked over, but what is wanted, you needed, at this time, is the exact situation and this must be had before very much more time elapses, as it is even now rather too incongruous a state of affairs that confronts us all our faraway possessions.

Some accounts, apparently authentic, make the natives of the interior with very few exceptions a race of pygmies, blood-thirsty, treacherous, ignorant and idolatrous, unable to read, write or commercialize, and least strangers to the commonest conveniences of civilization. This is the opinion of Mr. Worcester, the very worst and lowest of the race being selected as a representative of the whole. Other accounts from western apparently as reliable are vastly the reverse. These make the great bulk of the natives, so far as encountered, gentlemen in intelligent class, hospitable and reasonably well advanced along intellectual lines with many of the adjuncts of improved civilization. Between these divergent extremes might be the golden mean, anyway, it seems safe enough to conclude that the natives who are mountained and wild are extremely, while those who have been brought under civilizing and christianizing influences have progressed as rapidly as other races would have done under similar circumstances, and that the latter, which perhaps are the exceptions, are growing in numbers more rapidly than the others are. In this condition of things resides a nation upon which a great hope of this Republic may rest.

Native islanders have lately established a newspaper at Manila, called Independencia, which is described by gentlemen who have seen it as a very creditable production for the islands. If the paper extolled corresponds in tone and ability with the editatory editorial in the first number which appears entire in Freedom of that city, it shows a degree of energy, enterprise and modern advance such as would be of the dozen black races of the globe possess. A fair idea of the article can be gained from the following extract:

In inserting here publish the first number of our paper we consider it a duty to state the ideas and principles of our publication.

We defend the independence of the Filipino nation; that is the aspiration of a country which has arrived at its majority and which, from now on, has ceased to pupil, slumber in shadow, subject to a yoke of oppression and tyranny, but they have sufficient vitality to rise up.

In the short period of three months despotism of constitution and better have been organized and put into operation. Under the order of an elected government, the most cultured and civilized nations, and we feel that we are in unprepared time and cannot be long assists.

The conclusion to this resolved that a people who can do such things are able to govern themselves, and who can successfully maintain such a proposition? Abstractly it is irrefutable, but practice might show that the improvements spoken of were not interest in the nation but the result of intimidation with the people of the archipelago and that only by such means can a unique or the same disparaging behavior be accounted. It is, as we firmly believe, for this very reason that the American has been directed to and acquired possession of the islands, not to hold as a means of aggrandisement for its own sake, not to oppress, hinder or annoy, but as aid, advance, rebuke and by the force of superior example increased by the strong and protecting arm of military power, to lead the people to where the strands of right belong infinitely out of the mental and moral slough of despond. Then will they be able to govern themselves because intelligence resulting from education, and experience will have taken root and become the rule rather than the exception.

One thing is settled, that the hand of the oppressor will return no more forever. That was the one retarding influence without whose removal nothing but the slowest and most wearisome progress could be made. Indeed, the newspaper article quoted from in another place relinquishes the people quite so much on the extirpation of Spanish methods as upon the prospect of native sovereignty. It will all come in due time. When the majority know what the better means are and will cast it unceremoniously and independently, they will then be permitted to say for themselves what form of government they will have. They will then be in a better position to appreciate what it is that the mightiest of the nations has done for them, and few will there then be, if any, who will not vote to have a complete divorcement from it.

THE COMMON DRINKING CUP.

The use of a common drinking cup for school children has long been regarded as a means of communicating contagious diseases such as diphtheria, scarlet fever, whooping cough, the mumps, measles, sore eyes and various ailments of the eye. To remedy this a drinking fountain has been invented by a citizen of Rochester, N. Y., which, if brought into common use would do away with the use of drinking cups in public places. It resembles, according to an item in the Scientific American, of a marble pedestal about six feet high, capped with a funnel-shaped basin 12 inches in diameter. Upon applying pressure to a lever at the base of the basin a jet of water shoots up from the center of the basin and into the mouth when held over it. With a little practice one's thirst may be abundantly satisfied without the intervention of a drinking vessel of any kind. The jet is arranged so as not to spatter. The device admits of no contact of the lips with the jet pipe or any other portion of the apparatus, the water flowing from the supply pipe through the jet directly into the mouth, and all waste into the bowl, where it immediately runs off by an escape pipe. None is allowed to accumulate. If it is to be used by small children, wooden steps set on one side enable even the smallest child to obtain an adequate supply of water to slack his thirst.

No doubt this device, if adopted in the schools, would be the means of preventing the spread of much disease, but in the meantime it would seem practical for each child to carry with it a drinking cup of its own and use only that during school hours. A suggestion to that effect by superintendents of schools would be carried out immediately.

"It was not a high thought on the part of those who took up an opposition to Mr. Walker."—Tribune.

The "high thought" presumably was on the part of those who changed the place of convention to a hall where only a small part of the citizens entitled to be present could obtain entrance. We believe the voters generally put the right estimate on the attitude of that thought.

It may be of interest to local sports to know that at Manila, today, the Twenty-third Infantry baseball club plays a team from the Colorados, on Thursday the North Dakotas and Minnesotas cross bats, and on the 15th Utah again crosses the field, this time with Wyoming. We tender the latter our appreciative sympathy in advance.

A reader of the "News" took up his paper after supper last evening and never laid it down again until he had read every word of the President's message. Those of the East who think all the patriotic spirit and self-sacrificing devotion are on their side of the continent will please take notice.

It is stated that it costs $20 to get married in the Philippines. This is one of the very first things to be reformed.
