SIMPLE JUSTICE.

Julius Gentile was a very just man. He prided himself upon it and owned himself numerously. If there were a dispute between his neighbors, he, the Solomon, was always called in to settle it, which he did to his complete satisfaction and with justice. It was a proud day for the Israelite when he was first called upon to act as umpire in a case of difficulty. He was young and very simple-minded in those days, and was not aware that he had been selected because he was the only man who was willing to take the job
