SECRETARY SEARS' REPLY

To Councilman Rice, of the People's Forwarding Company.

Secretary Sears has sent the following reply to the explanation by Mr. Rice, which appeared in last evening's News, as to why he erased the petition asking for a postponement of the hearing in the freight transaction case:

SALT LAKE CITY, July 11, 1892.

E. R. Rice, Esq., Manager People's Forwarding Company, Salt Lake City:

Dear Sir—Your favor of even date to hand. The information being of public interest I will give it as much publicity as possible. I took up two reasons why the outside shippers may have felt greatly interested in the matter in reference to the resolution you received from the representative road, the Colorado, that they were contemplating going to Salt Lake from Ogden. I am sorry that our shippers, however, who are so interested, do not take the most implicit confidence in the goodness of refined rates. It seems to the members of this department that the shippers would much rather pay the prohibitory rates of the Union Pacific than to have the Interstate Commerce Commission come into their own and a necessary preliminary to such a movement. These agents have assured us, as we have stated, that the usual record of the companies, for instance, of a transcontinental shipper, who is, say, one in New York, the Chicago, Santa Fe and Pacific railroads proposed a reduction of that rate, which, of course, was found to be the very route now proposed by the delegation to Salt Lake City shippers. The action in which the Santa Fe road was asked to refer to the Board of Commissioners, which somewhat the action of the morning by "striking down" application for the reduction. This would make a case like display of generosity in a very remote country, and it is enough to have some very clear, or there not some pretty reasons for it. If the rest of our Utah shippers will bite hook with the Santa Fe, we stand the position that when asking for suspension, or our name, can an outside course should not favor us, or do the reverse in the matter, the probability is we may be more wise than before. Perhaps rates we put in may affect other points. The proper thing for the representatives of the railroads to do now would be to go back to our interests, and not go back upon the Counsel of Commerce were now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and be dissed with the rates now pending and wait for the controversy this would do my mind. If there were no local people interested, and shippers who are waiting to come for a month day's consideration of the proposed reduced freight rates, a position for holding the matter would be more plausible, but I think that most local and wise agents I accomplished with the petition, it is apparent the force of, to be reasonable after we to say, I have no wish to impose your motives, but I am intend to state that I think it is a wise one to give the petition referred to. I was an act of good elementary towards the Chamber of Commerce. It is generally known about that the Chamber is letting the moral support of a number of large shippers in its efforts to secure relief from the oppressive of the transportation companies, whose impression is erroneous. I am sorry that we have to have some many and active support of all the members of the city except those who are in receipt of favors from the railroad companies.

S. W. SEARS,
Commissioner.

ORIGINAL PAINTINGS.

A Special Premium of $50 Will Be Given for the Best Display by a Utah Artist.

Special offers for fair premiums are coming in fast, and the citizens are showing their public spirit in a substantial manner. The following from H. C. Chambers was received yesterday:

SALT LAKE CITY, July 11, 1892.

Heber M. Wells, Secretary D. A. & M. Society:

Dear Sir—The undersigned will give a special premium of $50 for the best and most meritorious display of original paintings by Utah artist, to be competed for at the Territorial Fair of 1892.

Respectfully,
H. C. CHAMBERS.

C. E. Johnson is already working up his photographic display for the October fair.

The Deseret Museum will be quite an attraction as well as an educational factor at the coming exhibition.

This year you will see the finest art collection ever exhibited in this territory, and it will be under the supervision of Mr. Wells.

Dr. John R. Park qualified yesterday as a director of the Deseret Agricultural and Manufacturing society and entered upon his duties as superviser of the educational department. He is anxious to co-operate with the World's fair committee and secure a fine exhibit in this corner of the territory—an exhibit that will show to some extent the possibility of 1893. The October fair will give the only chance for final preliminary work and that fact should not be lost sight of.

Arrangements have been make with F. W. Hitchcock, of Greenleaf, Kan., to act as judge of the poultry department this year, and he will be on hand. The premium fowl last year added much to sending a good show, and the management this year will insure that interesting corner of the fair.

A REMINISCENCE OF WILD BILL.

His Feat in Killing Two Men Who Had Plainly Leveled at Him.

Among the prominent citizens of Hayes City in the last days of Kansas railroad building was "Wild Bill" (William Hickok), who had been a well-known scout in the Union army along the Arkansas border during the war. Bill came to Hayes City with the prestige of having killed nine men, mostly, if not all, he killed him during the war intervening his death. He had followed "the K. P." railroad along every mile of its construction from Manhattan. His personal appearance and the suspicion of his white hand-pistol revolvers had become quite familiar all along the road, and especially at Abilene, during its days as the terminus of the Texas cattle drive, where, as city marshal, there was never a cowboy who got "the drop" on Bill.

Wild Bill in those days was "the Slade" of western Kansas, the man who Mark Twain says in "Roughing It" was respected in Nevada for having "killed his man." In physique, as the writer remembers him, he was as perfect a specimen of manhood as ever walked in moccasins or wore a pair of cavalry boots, and Bill was a dandy at times in either a regular frontier dude. He stood about 6 feet 2 inches tall, had a little waist and long, broad shoulders, small feet, long and supple hands, with tapering fingers, quick to feel the cards or pull the trigger of a revolver. His hair was auburn in hue, of the that brightened left and reddened by the sunlight. He had a clean, clear cut face, clean shaven, except a thin, drooping, sandy brown mustache, which he wore and treated with no success, even in getting an upward twist at either end. Brown indeed so he was, he had clear gray eyes. He had a splendid countenance, amiable in look, but firm withal. His luxuriant growth of hair fell in ringlets over his shoulders. There was nothing in his appearance to betray the dead shot and frequent murderer—except his trend. He smoked like a tiger, and cooked, he was as fearless and quiet as one.

Bill's house of livelihood at the time he was in Hayes City went unquestioned, and there is no reason for assuming the contrary at this late date. As "Bill Adams," however, Bill put himself on record very shortly after coming to Hayes City. His first report was a double shot, a right and left foothole. The writer witnessed the affair.

Two men came out of Tom Drum's saloon, and walked toward the newly built street, surrounded by a crowd of spectators. Each man had a pistol drawn, when suddenly from a group of four or five "crack crack" were two pistol shots and Wild Bill stood on the edge of the platform with a smoking Colt's navy revolver in each hand, and the two men who had been approaching the platform were seen to lie, each a foothole forward and full. Death was instantaneous in each case, as if Joyce had loaded a bolt at the face. A few over cards the night before caused the contestants and a double funeral as soon as the corpses could be prepared for interment.—St. Louis Republic.

Noble Virtues.

I know no fools of the sex which more admirably typify in their own persons the effects of a feminine tropical fruit eating life than the gorgeous toucans. Their big bill so slides down to touch our Lion scar at front in the act of their nose on the tress that Yarrell thinks, and he thus then off at a judge in a large and airy manner that is very characteristic of all the whole swallowing fruit eaters. They are generous and sociable birds, to a great extent organized into a third community, for they traffic constantly on terms of equal sociability with other birds and fellows, whom they surround and mock with, are around after the fashion of all dominant more, as rooks do in England.

Having thus little need for protection, they are noisy and clamorous in their native woods, resembling in all these respects the other gregarious fruit eaters, like parrots and monkeys. In short, they display for us in full perfection the free, democratic feelings, open and prompt life usually engendered in tropical surroundings among powerful and cool fragrances spring.—Cornhill Magazine.

The Judge Liked the Week.

A judge in one of the mountain districts told the sheriff to call in John Bellingsley to serve Bailiff Hooks. The sheriff, after almost dislocating his jaw over this euphonious title, finally induced Mr. J. R. R. Hooks into the courtroom and up to the judge's stand.

"What is it, your honor?" said Mr. Hooks.

"Ah," said the judge, rubbing his hands, "I only wanted to ask you for a chew of that excellent tobacco you gave me yesterday."

He got it.—Dallas (Tex) Citizen.

A Lesson for Papa.

Little Pet—I does those lessons mamma made me do last night, wasn't they?

Papa—Yes, they were delicious.

Little Pet—I didn't try none, but I knew my was.

Papa—You did? How?

Little Pet—You didn't say a word about nun.—Good News.

Something About Cats.

Do I steal many catskins? Yes as many as dogs, and not as many as birds, of course. Taking alone cats, I have cited to be sent to me, and I have served a cat in its early days. I never saw a female kitten that didn't have in its hair somewhere a few yellow hairs. I never saw one in a male. Another curious thing about cats is that whenever a cat has blue eyes it is invariably deaf.—Interview in Chicago Tribune.

A Gorgeous Blade.

It was in the Place de la Concorde that Louis XVI, Marie Antoinette, Mme. Elisabeth and some 2,000 other victims fell beneath the fatal blade which, by a curious irony of fate, is now to be seen in the shop-window of Rue Rivoli.—Madame Tussaud's—London Saturday Review.

England's Consumption of Paper Out.

England imports annually about 30,000 tons of paper, but it is now admitted that this is a very small amount compared with what might be the case were the enormous supplies fully or even moderately required.—New York Times.

Johnny's Mind Disciplined.

"Mr. Hankins was under the painful necessity of admonishing a severe castigation to his son Johnny. After he had completed his labors he said sternly to the suffering victim:

"Now tell me why I punished you."

"That's it," sobbed Johnny, eyes nearly pound the life out of me and you don't even know why you did it."—Cincinnati.

Not His Brother and Dead.

In the midst of the common rout our regiment, the Thirty-ninth New York volunteers, received orders to take the right flank, and my section was in the front.

Among my section were Germans, Italians, Spaniards and Frenchmen. Italians we were not, and we knew it.

The Union armies were situated so as to fire into the enemy's ranks from the side, and thereby endeavor to check their advance. As already stated, my section formed the front of the right flank, and the boys were doing splendid work as the enemy was advancing to make their final effort to break the ranks of our men. Suddenly I saw a man of my section advance toward the enemy's lines with outstretched arms, and at the same time crying at the pitch of his voice, "Mein brother, mein brother."

The battle raged between the opposing ranks, and in the midst of it he entered our ranks, the enemy. Then both came running toward our ranks.

I had liberty to take his brother to the rear as a prisoner and hand him over to the provost guard. It was foolish of me to do so, but I felt inspired by some magical power to urge him back, but he declined to go, and all urging was of no avail, consequently his brother went to the rear without an every. Shots worked hard and fast leading and firing his master. He looked for masks about five times, when suddenly he turned to me, holding his hand to his heart, muttering, "Joe, I must die." He fell to the ground and was dead.—New York Recorder.

A Sensible Priest.

A lady school teacher in Boston, who is rather proud of her profession than the average, is not pleased at having her occupation thrust forward when she meets strangers. Not long ago, at a reception, the hostess regularly mentioned her occupation in introducing her.

At length the hostess presented a young man, adding to the introduction, as usual, "Miss Fossil is one of our school teachers."

The gentleman bowed, but Miss Fossil said:

"I beg your pardon, Mrs. Allen, but I did not catch what the gentleman's business is."

"What his business is?" repeated the hostess in perplexity.

"Yes," Miss Fossil said. "I thought it only right that this acquaintance should start fair, and to prevent his my employment, it seemed only fair that I should know his."

The point was understood and taken good naturally, but the teacher was no longer introduced in her professional capacity.—Youth's Companion.

A Justice's Court on Wheels.

"Once when John Beatie was district judge up in Nevada and Barney Gomez, the late Judge Belden and I were on opposite sides of a case which was to be argued before him," began Supreme Justice McFarland the other day. "When we reached Nevada City we found the judge about to depart for Downieville on circuit to hold court there. He made a novel proclamation that we should ride over the mountains with him and argue our case on the way.

"We accepted the invitation, secured horses and started off on either side of the judge's mule. I opened the case and concluded my argument as we reached South San Juan. Then Belden replied. He was very much in earnest, and quite warm over the case, and didn't actually realize we had passed Nigger Tent. Then Judge Gomez summated a short time, and delivered his decision flat against Belden."—San Francisco Examiner.

The Dinner Hour.

The hour for dinner has undergone several changes. About 1400 it was 10 a. m. Henry VIII dined at this time and supped at 4. In the Six hundred century dinner was at 11, breakfast at 7 and supper at 5 p. m. In the following century meals were an hour later.

Dennett tells us that in the reign of Francis I of France folks rose at 8, dined at 9, supped at 7 and went to bed at 9, which, according to a popular saying made them live to the age of about nine. Louis XIII, it is said, hastened his death by shortening his hours to pass his young wife. Instead of dining at 5 a. m. and going to bed at 6 p. m., he took to dining at noon and of an all night—London Gas Chicago Herald.

The Art of Having Teeth.

Three thousand of both built find by a society in exposition of dentures, and the only good choice is to obtain the truth by being cared by the sunlight or other do in front of them with which we have daily intercourse. To begin with, on every occasion where there is to be a smile have of doing good by fault finding, and your eye as with a bar of iron.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Serious Disaster.

At Bell Street hall, Dundee, in January, 1885, the pressure of the crowd against the gates at the top of the staircase leading to the hall caused them to give way, and a number of persons fell headlong and were trampled on, thinking that the doors were opened, and on that short flight of thirteen steps nineteen people were crushed to death and many injured.—London Tit-Bits.

Through the whole range of human power, good's fair and Chaq's wood, low, ever, nineteen-twenty-one is clear predictor that it would be difficult to draw an exact line or to distinguish beyond a reasonable doubt between the good and bad.

Few accidents approached in horror to that in the Victoria hall, at Sunderland, when the children were crushed to death. That notice was [illegible] taken on the staircase.
