OGDEN.

OGDEN, UTAH. - FEB. 25, 1896.

Indictment Dismissed.

In the Second district court yesterday J. J. Whitaker was tried for arson, he being charged with having set fire to the First ward Latter-day Saints' meeting house on January 19, 1891. The defense was that the case was barred by the statute of limitations, a period of four years had elapsed between the alleged offense and the filing of the indictment. After considerable argument the court decided to dismiss the case on statutory grounds.

The Judge Was Right.

Bernard Hoss, found guilty of fornication, appeared for sentence yesterday. A strong effort was made to obtain a light sentence on the grounds that both parties concerning, it should not be considered a serious matter, but Judge Bishop did not take that view of the case, and Hoss was sentenced to four months imprisonment.

SOUTH AFRICAN LIONS.

They Are, It Is Said, the Boldest of All Predatory Animals.

South African lions are beyond question, the boldest of all predatory animals, and those of Mashonaland are perhaps the boldest of all. During the night, their natural hunting time, they attack draft animals, or even men, within a few yards of the campfires, and are a constant and serious danger to travelers in districts remote from the main tracks of traders. From the Zambesi, through Mashonaland, and north to the Limpopo a chorus of complaints rises in the pages of recent travelers whose cattle or followers have suffered from their attacks. Mr. Selous has recorded the loss of a pack mule by battery by a lion, and the loss of the mail bags, which the animal tore from the back of the pack horse. Mr. Millais, who crossed the Nuanetsi river with a team of eight donkeys to draw his wagon—the cows being left behind on account of the proximity of the "fly" country—lost three in one night by a lion attack, carried out with the utmost contempt for human beings, whether white or black. He was awakened by the lion's roar, and almost immediately saw one of the tethered donkeys knocked over. It was not five yards from the fire, but in the darkness and dazzle of the fire he could not see the attacker. "We knew instinctively that a lion had killed the donkey, and was standing near him not five paces from where we were, but it was hopeless to fire unless we saw something, or at least could guess certain of his whereabouts."

This odd game continued for some moments, the lion being four or five black paces, two white paces, a pony, seven fire donkeys and a dead one, and the lion standing over the latter, with a fire partly lighting up the figures, until a couple more donkeys broke loose. They rushed into a mealie field, and there the party found the lion chewing first one donkey and then another, as startled and as little afraid as a dog chasing rabbits in a field of barley. "At every bound the lion emitted a subdued 'hoo-off,' as his five legs struck the ground, but the two did not go far. There were presently a loud scuffle, a crack and the sound of a heavy body falling; then all was still." The lion carried the third donkey round the camp, killed and ate it, and was met day next by an ingenious trap, made by tying a rifle to posts, and fastening a string to the trigger, which the lion struck when returning to "kill." The unsportsmanlike method of succeeding in death is earned by Captain Millais on the ground of necessity. This lion was 10 feet long from the tip of the nose to the tip of the tail, was in perfect health and immensely formidable.—London Spectator.

A man that lives his own life, and can govern his losses without falling by the case with his neighbors or engaging in suits at law, is as free as a Duke of Venice.—Montaigne.
