TRUE GREATNESS.

We know not how to decide for half
Who most to admire—some men that call
Are most noble with not much care
Or are which cannot be moved or shaken
Yet are which better men were racked
The lion, which is said to stand the fire
For all the powers of the sight
Provoke the adage, "Might makes Right."

Mr. H. Ann Robinson is the showman
Which there not Lord Lonsdale lived and taught,
The 10 man now to be the best
And yet he never measures the weight,
And lifting up the dumbbell
For all to admire will tenderly light
Down by their heavenly Right makes Might.

UTAH LEGISLATURE.

COUNCIL.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

C. F. 56, providing for the recording of claims to water rights for the construction of land for reservoir and aqueducts, and the appointment of a Territorial engineer of irrigation and priority was read the second time by title and filed for third reading.

The fee bill was also read the second time and was followed by the Deer Creek county measure, labeled C. F. 86, creating Young county, which was reported back by the committee on counties without recommendation.

Mr. Evans moved, at the conclusion of the reading, that the enacting clause be stricken out. He understood that the section of country described in the bill contained a population not to exceed fifty. At the present time prickly pears and sagebrush are the principal commodities, and he doubted not but that buffalo, with mustrels distended and tails erected, were at the present time pawing through the streets of Dagah, the proposed county seat.

Mr. McCulloch of Tooele was also against the bill. He informed the solons that the total amount of taxes received by Juab county from the portion of that county included in the proposed county was $310 and from Tooele's portion $500. The petition asking for the creation of the county was signed but by eighty-three taxpayers and there were but forty-two voters in the limits of the proposed county.

After Evans' motion then prevailed by the following vote:

Ayes—Evans, Graves, Melville, Merrill, McCulloch, Peters and Mr. Speaker—7.

Noes—Barlow, Gleddhill, Haynes, Lund and Mortensen.

C. F. No. 84, relating to irrigation companies was read the second time.

The claim of Sheriff Fowler of Utah county for $900, services rendered in court attendance while was reported back by the committee was taken up and was the cause of considerable discussion between Evans, Haynes, Barlow and Lund. In the upshot it was unanimous that as the law provided that sheriffs should receive compensation for attendance at court at the rate of three dollars per diem that should be paid, but not until the claims were more clearly set forth and each made that they were in actual attendance on the days named in the claims.

It was finally determined to recommit the claim.

The following bills were read the third time and passed:

C. F. 69, relating to the assignment of dower in district courts.

C. F. 80, regulating the procedure in the matter of dower in district courts.

C. F. 77, establishing an agricultural college and an experimental station in connection therewith.

H. F. 36 (substitute), authorizing counties to issue bonds for establishing hitchingposts and for other purposes.

H. F. 99, authorizing county courts to transcribe county court records.

H. F. 86, attaching a part of Uintah County to Grand County.

H. F. 75, providing for the payment of attorneys' fees in justices' courts, was laid upon the table.

A claim from Millard County for pole for maps furnished the county assessor, was referred to the committee on claims.

At 5:10 the Council adjourned until 2 p.m. today.

HOUSE.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Quite a number of amendments were made to the school bill exactly the changing of words, without affecting the bill to any extent.

Lawrence moved to recommit, that the amendments might be made to harmonize, but it was lost.

The bill passed by a vote of 18 ayes to 2 nays.

The committee on enrollment reported that the following had been forwarded to the governor: H. J. R. 3, for the purchase of Vol. 8 of Compiled Laws of 1888 for distribution.

A claim for $31.50 was presented in favor of Joseph E. Caine for stenographer's service, and returned to the committee on claims.

H. F. 95, to regulate the practice of pharmacy, came up on the third reading. It was passed by a vote of 17 ayes and 1 nay.

The Council message the passage of C. F. 86, relating to procedure in cases of dower, and C. F. 85, relating to assignment of dower, both went to committee on judiciary.

Two motions to reconsider failed, and a motion to make the hour to which to adjourn 10 a.m. today prevailed.

H. F. 90, providing that notaries public affix the date of which their commissions expire, was read third time and passed.

H. F. 85, amending sections 2270, 2271 and 2272 Compiled Laws, relative to taking costs, including attorneys' fees, was considered and passed.

H. F. 60, amending section 2268 Laws of 1888, relative to the punishment for branding mavericks, making the term of imprisonment not less than six months nor more than three years and making the crime a "felony." The bill passed.

H. B. 8, to provide for the education of blind children, went through its third reading and passed.

At 5:40 a motion to adjourn prevailed.

Home and Health.

"Better is a dinner of herbs where love is than a stalled ox and hatred therewith." Prov. 15: 17.

Plain food, pure air, exercise, cheerful thought, these are the means by which the wall of health is to be built up.

Stale bread is much more digestible than the newly baked. The day after baking is time enough to begin eating the last baked loaves.

Do not let vegetables decay in the cellar, and keep it clean and the air pure by proper ventilation.

The use of salt in excess is hurtful. While salt exists in the tissues, and is doubtless necessary to a limited extent in the food, it more than sufficient to keep up the regular of the tissues is hurtful, the surplus becomes an irritant.

Corn-meal mush makes a very good dessert when well cooked. This is easily and nicely done by making it in the proper way: Put three pints of water and steam for two or three hours. Served with milk and sugar, or fruit juice, it is a delicacy.

Half-cooked fruit is unfit for use. It is not economy to eat anything unfit for food. The effect of such improper articles is often found in diarrhoea, colic, and like ailments. Look over your fruit carefully, and if it is likely to spoil, have it canned for future use.

Oranges at this time of the year are remarkably cheap, and can be used for sauce with little expense. One orange makes a good dish of sauce at a cost of two or three cents each. These are said to be very temperate, and are not to be regarded as a mere luxury.

It is particularly hurtful for children to eat meat, hard eggs, or spiced food at night. In saying this we do not wished it exercised that we think it healthful for grown people to eat such things for supper. It is bad for anybody, but worse for children than grown people.

Practical housekeeping is one of the rare accomplishments of the present day. Every girl needs several months under a faithful mother in all that pertains to practical life, for she is an accomplished woman. Home training in place of so much school life is the great defect of our girls.

The habit of early retiring and early rising, formed in childhood, is apt to go with the person through life, and has much to do with success or failure. Let the child have all the sleep it needs, but put it to bed early and let it wake up of itself. It will soon fall into regular habits of sleep, which have much to do with its health and good nature.

Few teeth are frequently the result of bad diet. Children are fed on fine flour, meat and sweets. Starch diet is ruinous to the teeth. Give them coarse bread, graham johnny, all the brown bread they will eat, with abundance of good fruit and vegetables and milk to supply the need of animal food, and if they are properly cared for otherwise, they will have good solid teeth.

The Stars and the Earth.

It is generally thought by astronomers today that all the celestial phenomena within the reach of human vision belong to a single great system, and it is not yet possible to say just what the controlling cause is the centers of the state composing the visible universe is. Observation shows that all the stars are in motion, but with varying velocities, and in all possible directions. In the same quarter of the sky, and even in comparatively crowded regions of space, some stars are found to be moving in one direction and some in another. In the case of the well-known figure of the Great Dipper, for instance, the motions of the stars are such that in the course of some thousands of years at least, this figure will cease to be remarked in the sky. Many of its stars will have separated, going in several directions, although some of them will continue to keep company, as their journey lies the same way in space. So, too, some of the stars are approaching us and some are receding from us. The spectroscope, aided by photography, enables astronomers to measure the velocity of these flying stars, and we either coming nearer to or passing further from us, with an accuracy that takes account of a single mile per second. The sun is not exempt from the contagion of lack of motion. It is speeding at the rate of several hundred millions of miles in a year towards a point in the northern heavens situated not far from the brilliant star Vega, a sun that is vastly more luminous than our own. So we on the earth are not traveling, as most persons imagine, in a beaten track around the sun year after year, but the earth follows the sun in its northward pointed course, and consequently creeps onward in vast circles around our moving sun, so that we are continually borne into new regions of space.

The extension of the law of gravitation throughout the universe has been questioned, but never very seriously, and every look investigation of stellar motion strengthens the belief that that law really governs the whole visible celestial system. In the case of the binary stars, of which a great number are known, the revolution of one star around one another or around their common center, evidently takes place in obedience to that law. Now, if gravitation extends throughout the universe, so that can escape from the attractive influence of every other star, and of all the other stars, the gravitation in itself forms, so it were, a system of links or chains binding the stellar system together. More than once it has been imagined that the great center of motion in the universe had been discovered or located. Many years ago Maller thought that the Pleiades were the centre around which our sun was moving, and the beautiful star Alcyone became widely celebrated as the great central sun. But it was all imagination. Later investigation showed that Maller was mistaken, and now astronomers are not even prepared to say in what direction the centre of the sun's motion lies, or, indeed, whether it is not at present actually flying about in a straight line. The fact seems to be, that there are many centres of motion, as the tendency of the stars to aggregate in streams and clusters indicates, but the precise relation of these aggregations to one another has not yet been made out.

The very variety which we behold in the universe shows so clearly the operation of systematic forces of development that it serve as an argument in favor of the view that all we see are only different parts of a single system. Elements that exist in the stars are detected glowing in the atmosphere of stars in all quarters, but the same instrument which reveals the presence of these elements, discovers also the fact that the bodies composed of them are in various stages of development. Our sun represents only one type of a solar body, and its condition is not permanent and unchangeable. In Sirius and Vega we behold sane which are evidently glowing with a far fiercer energy and a much greater intensity of radiation than our own exhibits at present. But we may go a step further back than that which gives or any star represents, and perceive in the whirling spirals of the Andromeda nebula, and in the vast streams and condensing aggregations of the Orion nebula, evidences of the formation of stellar centers out of elements of chaotic gases through a process that is going on now, and, so to speak, under our eyes. It is believed by many that living minds in strides the earth that we inhabit.—Ann Arbor Sun.

A GOOD EVIDENCE.

According to Professor Sophocles, dean of Harvard university, little things were kept small and great things large. What was the tree resulting in a passage of Aristophanes, that the usage of a certain word in Byzantine Greek—these were matters in which a man might well realize and labor, but of what consequence was it if the Byzantine war might or the end worse?

A single room, in which a faint was making seed, sufficed him during his forty years of life in the school yard. It was totally bare of comforts. It contained no carpet, no stuffed furniture, no bookcase. The college library furnished the volumes in use at any time using, and these he kept during the term in his dictionary, his shoes and the box that contained the new clothes.

A single lamp table held the book he had just laid down, together with a Greek newspaper, a cow stalk, a cravat, a paper package of tea and some scraps of bread. His simple meals were prepared by himself over a small open stove, which served as ours for heat and cookery.

The incongruity between his bitter speech and his kind heart endeared both to those who knew him. He was never weary in well doing. Into his venomous death, he gathered his baggage after his a beauty under teeth. His room was now but in his native town an opulent was built, he impertinable and ingenuous relatives were mentioned, the monks of Mount Sinai were protected against want, and the children of those who had befriended his early years in America were watched over with a father's love.—Professor Palmer in Atlantic Monthly.

An Irish Lord.

The annals of the Emerald Isle bristle with incidents of dueling in which Irish honor, if not at all times Irish bravery, is conspicuous. On one occasion Sir Jonah Barrington fought a duel with a barrister named McNally. The latter had one leg shorter than the other, and because it was his habit when in a hurry to take two thumping steps with the short leg to bring up the space made by the long one, he was nicknamed "One Pound Two." McNally could get no one of his bar to fight him, and so he challenged Barrington, who good naturedly exchanged shots in the Phoenix park.

The bravest bit his opponent in the breast, then called the "gallows," and feared he had killed him. When the result was made known one of the seconds shouted, "Shoo, you arrah, you! Sure I don't know who was killed by the gallows."—Leeds Mercury.

One Wanted to Ride.

A little girl, after watching with interest the passing of a company of soldiers, turned to her mother and said:

"I do wish I was a boy, mamma."

"Why do you wish that you were a boy, Catherine?" asked the mother.

"Because I want to be a soldier and wear a red coat and fire a gun and ride on a horse."

"But all soldiers do not ride horses, you know. Only the cavalrymen and officers ride. Do you think that you would insist on being a horse?"

"No, mamma. I wouldn't wish to be a soldier if I couldn't have a horse. I should want the horse because I could get away from the war quicker on his back than I could if I had to run on my own legs."—New York Times.

Marriage in Turkey.

The dowry of a Turkish bride is fixed by custom at about $1.70, which amount, for public reasons, is seldom departed from, even by the rich. The wedding day is invariably Thursday, and the ceremony of wedding festivities begin on Monday and last four days. They are carried on by men and women separately, and each day is distinguished by a different ceremony. No spoons or forks or wine are used at the wedding feast.—Philadelphia Times.

The second attack I am satisfied would have been equally as bad as the first but for the use of this remedy, as I had to go to bed in about six hours after being struck with it, while in the first case I was able to attend to business about two days before getting down." 50 cent bottles for sale by Z.
